The SRA will work closely with key organisations, passenger transport executives and co-signatories to several franchise agreements. The Scottish Executive will have power to instruct and guide the SRA on certain aspects of rail services that are wholly in Scotland. The GLA will be able to procure enhanced rail services from the SRA and propose changes to the pattern of services in London. The Welsh Assembly, by contrast, will be consulted only on passenger service specifications. None of those powers will compromise the SRA's duty to plan the operation and development of the rail network strategically across Great Britain.

The Welsh Assembly plainly has considerably weaker powers than the Scottish Parliament and the Greater London Authority, a distinction crucial to the economic development of Wales. A Cardiff office of the SRA could help properly to integrate rail services in Wales, which are currently poor. Back-Bench Members whinge, and Ministers get fed up of us, but I say nothing against the Minister by pointing out that rail services in Wales are probably at their lowest ebb.

Siting an office in Cardiff could help in the short term. Consultation is beginning on the proposed Railways Bill. Will the Minister convey the idea of a Cardiff office to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions? It would help our economy as well as developing a sustainable transport policy for Wales. I want a passenger transport authority for Wales—but for the time being, a Welsh SRA would be a useful step.

Last month, the Welsh Consumer Council reported on railways in "The European Connection: A report on transport connections to Europe". It found that railways in Wales were in a perilous state, never having been so poor. It observed that the system in Wales had become fragmented, failing to deliver any of the perceived benefits of privatisation. It opined that the quality of service to passengers had reached an all-time low.

Old trains are being transferred from routes in England to Wales. Recently, a relatively new set was taken off the north Wales coast railway to be replaced by a 1957 set. That is not good enough on one of the main lines in north Wales. The report also observes that the Assembly will control budget subsidies for roads, but will have no control over railways. The different administrative locations will make integration and co-operation difficult. Its firm conclusion is that the National Assembly should create a passenger transport executive so that—inter alia—the needs of passengers come first, and so that all forms of public transport are integrated and there is sufficient investment by rail operators in new rolling stock, staff and stations to provide an efficient, all-round service.

Three months ago, some high-powered Japanese entrepreneurs visited north Wales. They were intent on investing in the old county of Clywd in the eastern part of north Wales. Their arrival on train was delayed by two hours; shortly afterwards, they decided that investment was not a good idea. If that is not a graphic example of how the situation is hitting us economically, I do not know what is.

We are beginning the consultation period on the Railways Bill. I urge the hon. Lady to bring these matters to the attention of her right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, so that the legitimate and deeply held concerns of the Welsh travelling public are met and so that, at the end of the day, Wales, too, will have a first-class, integrated public transport system with an excellent railway at its heart.

8.16 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): I congratulate the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on securing this debate and providing an opportunity for the House to discuss railway regulation in Wales.

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is aware that one of the key objectives identified at the national rail summit in February was to improve the quality of service for passengers while obtaining the best possible value for money for the taxpayer. One of the steps towards achieving that objective was the setting up, on 1 April, of the shadow Strategic Rail Authority, under Sir Alastair Morton, with Mike Grant as the new franchising director. The work of that body is well under way. Our new Railways Bill will formally establish the Strategic Rail Authority on a statutory basis, as well as aiding our regulation of railways in general—including those in Wales.

Our Bill will put right some of the more glaring faults of the previous Administration's privatisation. It will amend the tangled mess of railways legislation left by that Administration. They left our railways without a single voice, champion or focus. The railways were run as separate businesses, not a national network. What does our Railways Bill do?

As I said, the Bill establishes the Strategic Rail Authority. It sets out the mission statement for the SRA: to promote the use of the railway network for passengers and for freight; to secure the development of the railway network; and to contribute towards integrated transport. The Bill requires the SRA to produce a strategy or strategies to fulfil that mission. It transfers the duties of consumer protection to the SRA and a simplified closure procedure to the Secretary of State. It retains the rail regulator as an independent economic regulator, subject only to high-level guidance from Ministers on the Government's transport policy. It allows the SRA to ask the rail regulator to direct owners of railway facilities, such as trains or stations, to enhance them or provide new facilities. The Bill will enable the SRA to step in and operate trains if a franchise goes bankrupt, or if there are no acceptable private sector bids when a franchise is re-let.

The Bill allows the SRA, and the rail regulator, to impose more effective sanctions on those who break the terms of their franchise agreements or licences. In contrast to the position under the Railways Act 1993, contraventions that may have caused widespread inconvenience and loss, but which have been remedied by the time lengthy enforcement action is completed, could in future attract penalties. The Government have agreed in principle that the SRA will be able to retain income from penalties and reinvest it in the railways.

It is vital that our railways are run as a national network and because of that they must remain a reserved matter. However, that will be to the advantage of Wales—for which proper rail links are, I know, extremely important. Indeed, in his closing remarks, the hon. Gentleman demonstrated that vital importance in respect of inward investment.

We also know and respect the needs and concerns of the devolved Administration. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has agreed with the our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales that there will be Welsh representation on the Strategic Rail Authority, and that the authority will consult the Assembly about the exercise of its functions as they relate to Wales.

The hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy suggested the establishment of a separate SRA for Wales, but, as I have said, what is overwhelmingly important is for us to return to the concept of a national integrated network. An SRA for Wales could not form a strategy for the whole network, and that would disadvantage Wales as well as the wider railway network.

It is essential for the SRA to be able to ensure that the railways are run as a national network, and to produce a strategy for the whole network. Most Welsh services start, end, or pass through England. Cutting them off—making them a separate entity—would lead to even more fragmentation. As I have said, proper, coherent links are vital to Wales.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the different position in Scotland. The position is different there because the network is largely self-contained. A Scottish policy will not have the impact on the rest of Great Britain that a Welsh policy might have; nor will it fragment Scottish services. The powers of Scottish Ministers will, however, be exercisable only within the Great Britain strategic framework.

Given the huge pressure on legislative time in the House of Commons, the introduction of the Railways Bill now is, we believe, an unequivocal demonstration of the resolve of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, and indeed of the Government as a whole, to fulfil our side of the bargain and improve our railway services. That will be of inordinate benefit to Wales, and to Great Britain as a whole. I am sure the hon. Gentleman will agree that it is both a welcome and a fundamental step towards a better railway, which, in turn, will feed into the aims and objectives announced last year in our integrated transport White Paper.

An obvious factor that influences people's choice of transport is performance. The main concern of passengers is that their trains run, and run to time. As the hon. Gentleman said, performance in many parts of Wales is, or has been, below par, notably the service recently provided by the Valley Lines—formerly known as Cardiff Railway—and Wales and West Passenger Trains. Long-term problems have also been experienced on Great Western Trains and the west coast main line.

The franchise agreements for all but InterCity operators include a punctuality incentive regime, under which companies are rewarded for improved performance or penalised for poor performance. It will come as no surprise to rail users in Wales, or indeed to the hon. Gentleman, to hear that between them Valley Lines, Wales and West Passenger Trains, Great Western and Central Trains paid more than £4 million under these regimes in the financial year up to 31 March 1999. That is a lamentable advertisement for rail services in Wales.

We have made it clear that poor performance by train operators will not be tolerated. Last November, an action plan was agreed with franchisees and Railtrack to secure short-term improvements in performance. Measures agreed included 800 new train drivers, 500 new vehicles, a joint "hit squad" to identify and tackle the worst 50 black spots, a national "trouble shooter" team to tackle punctuality problems, and a new national passenger survey to find out what passengers think about their rail services, and to help measure performance across the network.

As I have said, building on the success of the November meeting, the national rail summit took place in February to assess progress on the action plan, and to put in place solutions to tackle medium to long-term problems. We also launched the national passenger survey, and the start of a consultation with the rail industry and passenger representatives on a new standard measure of overall performance to reflect the experience of passengers more accurately. The rail industry also accepted our challenge to improve punctuality over the next year, and committed itself to deliver real performance improvements that are measurable year on year.

When franchises are renegotiated, past performance will be one of the criteria on which operators are assessed and considered for future involvement in the industry. We have warned all train operators that those who fail to improve services will have no long-term future in our railways.

There are some significant new rail developments in Wales. The first of these is bilingual signing, and I understand that Wales and West Passenger Trains is in the process of installing bilingual customer information systems at all of the stations within Wales that it manages. I welcome that initiative as an example of a train operator responding to the wishes of passengers in Wales. The second is the north to south Wales fast train service, which was announced on 25 March. A feasibility study has been conducted and, although funding has yet to be finalised, the anticipated start date remains summer 2000. Thirdly, while I welcome the increase in frequency of Great Western trains between London Paddington and Bristol from June, I welcome even more its increasing the frequency of London to Cardiff trains by 2001.

We are committed to encouraging more people to travel by rail and to ensuring more investment in the rail network. That is why we have made available additional funding for a new rail passenger partnership scheme, launched on 24 May and aimed specifically at providing support for locally sponsored services that are not commercially viable. Applications for funding will be assessed on planning criteria that take wider social benefits into account. Guidance has been issued to local authorities on how to bid for funds under that scheme.

Proposals for RPP support can be submitted by various bodies, including local authorities, passenger transport executives and authorities, and train operating companies, either as individuals or consortiums. Local authorities and others are encouraged to come forward with proposals. Formal bids will be appraised to ensure that they are consistent with Opraf's planning criteria and the franchising director's objectives, instructions and guidance. Bids will have to demonstrate the achievement of value for money in the delivery of the scheme. Copies of the RPP bidding guidance and planning criteria have already been sent to all local authorities.

I repeat, our perception is that it is vital that our railways are run as a national network, and that that will be to the advantage of Wales. We recognise the needs and concerns of the devolved Administrations and we are listening to them. The Government would strongly and wholeheartedly endorse the points made by the hon. Gentleman about the needs of railways as part of a properly integrated transport system. However, as I said, we believe that to split off the railways in Wales would make the situation in Wales even worse. Many of the problems that passengers in Wales suffer are, as we know, owed to the failure of previous Administrations adequately to invest in our railways. The Government are committed to change that, not only by our policies, but by our approach to regulation and through the additional funding that we have found for our railways. I assure the hon. Gentleman and all the people of Wales that Wales is central to our considerations and to the delivery of our programme.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-eight minutes past Eight o'clock.

Gay Relationships

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages to the social security system of recognising gay relationships. [87348]

Angela Eagle: In the contributory benefits system, all rights to contributory benefits derived from another person's contributions are based on the concept of a legal marriage.

In income-related benefits, a couple is treated as a single unit, and benefit is calculated on the basis of the couple's combined needs and resources. A couple means either a married couple, or a man and a woman who are living together as husband and wife. In this country, current legislation permits a contract of marriage between members of the opposite sex only. Income-related benefits rules, which define an unmarried couple as comprising a man and a woman, follow this principle.

Currently, we have no plans to carry out an assessment of the Social Security system as proposed. However, we do keep the system under review and aim to build a modern Social Security system which reflects today's changed society.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what independent assessment he plans to make of the Year 2000 compliance of his Department's business-critical information technology systems. [88402]

Angela Eagle: Aspects of the Department's Year 2000 Programme as well as the Programme overall have already been subject to more than 20 independent assessments since work commenced in 1995. The latest one was conducted by IMPACT consultancy in May. This assessment was undertaken to fulfil our part in Action 2000's Independent Assessment Project of essential sectors of the national infrastructure. Findings will be disclosed at the National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July.

The Department will be commissioning a further round of independent assessments of all delivery organisations later in the year and the results will be made available as part of the National Infrastructure Project monitoring phase.

These figures are VAT-exclusive and rounded to the nearest £50 million and 0.5 per cent. respectively. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the command structure of the KLA; what measures he is taking to ensure co-operation with KLA elements which are not part of the central structure; and if he will make a statement. [87301]

Mr. George Robertson: The KLA's command structure is presently based on military lines. It consists of the KLA Interim Government of Kosovo (IGOK) below which is the KLA's General Staff. The staff commands and controls the seven Operational Zones (OZ) found throughout the province. The OZs in turn command a number of KLA brigades and independent battalions.

It is for General Jackson and his military commanders on the ground to determine how to deal with individual groups with whom they may have contact. They will be dealt with on an impartial basis but will be expected to act in accordance with the undertaking on demilitarisation given by the KLA to KFOR on 21 June.

Sexual Discrimination

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) estimates he has made of the number of cases involved and (b) provision his Department has made in respect of future compensation claims for sexual discrimination. [88374]

Mr. Spellar: It is inherently difficult to forecast the number of applications likely to be made to Employment Tribunals in which sexual discrimination is alleged. However, based on the number and value of cases settled in the previous two years and cases outstanding my Department could expect about 10–12 applications at a total value of some £250,000 will be settled this financial year from Service or former Service personnel.

Similar information relating to civilian employees of the Department is not held centrally.

Army Families Federation

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of the Army Families Federation; and what was discussed. [88362]

Mr. George Robertson: I met representatives of the Army Families Federation at their annual conference on 23 September 1998. In my speech and in the question and answer session I discussed the Policy for People initiative announced as part of the Strategic Defence Review. This included the Service Families Task Force, education, health and welfare. In addition, last week I met AFF representatives and Army families in Germany to hear their current concerns at first hand.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department was first informed that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88795]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department, together with others, was informed earlier this month that there was some doubt whether these provisions had been effectively renewed by the 1998 and 1999 Continuance Orders, and that advice was being sought on this point.

Strategic Stock

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the United Kingdom's strategic stock of (a) ordnance and (b) fuel was used during NATO operations in Kosovo; what assessment he has made of the impact on the United Kingdom's defence capability; and what estimate he has made of (i) the length of time required and (ii) the cost to replace the stock used. [87196]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding information on the percentage of the United Kingdom's ordnance stock used during the NATO operation in Kosovo, and the length of time taken to replace ordnance stocks, under exemption 1a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (information where disclosure would harm national security on defence). The UK does not hold a strategic stock of fuel. Stocks of fuel are continually replenished in order to maintain them at appropriate levels.

We have not yet conducted a full analysis of the impact of operations in Kosovo. While timely and measured steps are being taken to replace ordnance, it is too early to make a meaningful estimate of the cost involved.

St. Malo Accord

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the instances of military co-operation which (a) have arisen and (b) are planned consequential to the St. Malo Accord. [85218]

Mr. George Robertson: The Letter of Intent on co-operation in crisis management and operations, signed between the UK and France at St. Malo in December 1998, has moved work forward on planning for non-combatant evacuation operations; joint exercises; improved links between operational headquarters; co-ordination of naval deployments; information exchanges on peacekeeping activities; Year 2000 computer problems; logistics; and arrangements for dealing with the media. We will continue to develop our co-operation in these areas.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Attorney-General if he will announce the Government's final response to the recommendations contained in Sir Ian Glidewell's report following his review of the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement. [88910]

The Attorney-General: Shortly after coming into office, I set up a review of the Crown Prosecution Service. Its terms of reference, 12 June 1997, Official Report, columns 533–34, went to the fundamentals of the Service.

An examination of the organisation and structure of the CPS was required along with consideration of what changes might be necessary to provide for more effective and efficient prosecution of crime.

The terms of reference reflected the concerns expressed in the Labour Party paper, "The Case for the Prosecution". That paper was prepared while in opposition after considering the disquiet expressed by a wide range of individuals about the criminal justice system.

As is well known by now, Sir Iain Glidewell conducted the review, assisted by Sir Geoffrey Dear and Robert McFarland.

I published Sir Iain's Report on 1 June 1998, Official Report, columns 42–52. The report was widely and warmly received. It acknowledged the achievements of the CPS including, most importantly, the establishment of an independent, national, prosecution service. However, it also confirmed many of the concerns that had been expressed about the CPS. It made 75 recommendations.

I was able to accept immediately the broad thrust of the Report which sets an agenda for re-ordering the priorities of the CPS to focus on the core business of prosecuting. A key recommendation concerned the appointment of a Chief Executive. That was a specific recommendation I was able to accept immediately: Mark Addison was appointed and took up the post within a matter of days. David Calvert-Smith QC was appointed DPP in November 1998. The Director and Chief Executive have together given a strong lead, driving forward the reform of the CPS.

While some of the recommendations affect the internal operation of the CPS, other recommendations are relevant to a number of criminal justice agencies, including the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Home Office and the police. These inter-agency recommendations have been taken forward by the relevant agencies working together in co-operation.

On 30 November 1998 I was able to announce an interim Government response to the Glidewell Report, 30 November 1998, Official Report, columns 67–70. That interim response identified what had by then been achieved and what remained under consideration.

Today, I am able to provide the final Government response to Sir Iain Glidewell's Report. I have placed in the Library of the House a chart which identifies whether the Government accepts or otherwise each individual recommendation. Where necessary, the chart shows how recommendations are planned to be taken forward with a timetable for action. Sixty-four recommendations are shown as accepted, accepted in part or in principle, or implemented. Only two of the recommendations are rejected; these are identified below. The remaining few recommendations are shown as noted or considered.
I shall focus on some of the key aspects.

On 19 April 1999 I announced a new national framework for Criminal Justice Units building on a key recommendation in the Glidewell Report, 19 April 1999, Official Report, columns 397–98. The Criminal Justice Units will provide joint police/CPS administration, having sole conduct of fast-track cases and responsibility for the prosecution of cases in the magistrates' courts. Chief Crown Prosecutors working together with Chief Constables must produce by the end of November this year joint outline plans for implementing the Criminal Justice Units. Progress will be monitored.

I can now announce that CPS Trial Units will also be established, again building on a key recommendation in the Glidewell report. The Trial Units will be responsible for all prosecutions in the Crown Court. They will provide a means by which CPS lawyers can focus on the most serious cases and a structural mechanism through which CPS Higher Court Advocates will be able to exercise their rights of audience to the benefit of the justice system.

The creation of Criminal Justice Units and Trial Units will go a long way to defining more clearly the relationship between the key agencies of the police, CPS and courts, as the Glidewell Report recommended. One crucial area of local co-operation concerns the listing of cases at court. The Glidewell Report made recommendations regarding listing practices at both Magistrates' Courts and Crown Court centres. These recommendations have been accepted. Improved case preparation by the CPS and inter-agency moves towards better case management should lead to more effective listing practices which will ensure that cases are prepared and listed for trial more quickly. Work is underway on the preparation of national protocols to guide local arrangements in this respect.

Over a period, as a result of fast-tracking and effective listing, the CPS will be able to deploy more lawyers on the more serious cases and thereby achieve the shift in the centre of gravity recommended by the Glidewell Report.

After careful consideration, two of the Glidewell Report recommendations have been rejected, though the concerns that prompted the recommendations are best addressed in other ways.

First, the Glidewell Report recommended that the CPS install a new costing system. The CPS commissioned an independent consultant to consider this complex area in close detail. As a result, it has been decided that the existing activity based costing system should be retained but improved to reflect the objectives identified by the Glidewell Report.

Secondly, the Glidewell Report recommended that as soon as practicable the CPS should take over from the police responsibility for witness warning. The possibility of transferring this responsibility has been considered carefully but is not thought to be a practical option, or a proper reflection of the respective constitutional priorities of the CPS and the police. Though the recommendation is rejected, the new framework for joint CPS/police administration will enable the police and CPS to work together to provide a better service to victims and witnesses by building on established arrangements.

Related to this second recommendation is the Glidewell recommendation that responsibility for giving information and explanations to complainants/victims should transfer from the police to the CPS as soon as resources permit. The Government are committed to improving the service that the criminal justice system as a whole provides to victims and the Glidewell recommendation is accepted in principle. The issues raised with implementing this recommendation will be taken forward on a national basis as part of on-going work on the treatment of victims and witnesses. This will involve a scoping/options study.

and a detailed analysis of the resource implications. In the meantime, the CPS and criminal justice agencies will consider what immediate action can be taken to improve the current level of service which victims receive.

The reforms brought about by the Glidewell Report must be seen alongside the re-structuring of CPS Areas. When this Government came into office, I announced our intention that the CPS national structure should move from the existing 13 geographical Areas to 42 geographical Areas coterminous with police areas (save for London in which the Metropolitan Police Service and the City of London Constabulary should be counted as one CPS Area). This initiative is aimed at enhancing local effectiveness, promoting local inter-agency co-operation and local accountability. It is an initiative which the Glidewell Report endorsed believing it to provide the basis for a genuinely new start for the CPS.

In April, the 42 CPS Area structure was implemented. The selection process for the new Chief Crown Prosecutors (CCPs) took into account Sir Iain Glidewell's vision of their role and responsibility as individuals of stature whose competence and integrity would be crucial to the success of the move to a decentralised, locally accountable, national service. The Glidewell Report also recommended that Area Business Managers (ABMs) be appointed to take responsibility for Area management and administration, thereby enabling the CCPs to focus on the business of prosecuting. The CCPs and ABMs are now in post helping to implement locally the reform of the CPS.

The move to 42 CPS Areas is an important part of what I intend to be a significant cultural change for the CPS, one which will greatly enhance the public service provided by its staff. There are encouraging signs that the cultural change is well underway with the CPS becoming a more flexible and locally accountable organisation, responsive to local needs and circumstances.

In turn, this means a changing role and a changing culture for CPS national headquarters. It will provide the national framework for prosecuting, manage the resources available to the Service as a whole and facilitate the joined-up approach to improving the criminal justice system to which the Government are committed. Its principal role will be to provide support to the Areas, enabling them to deliver a prosecution service locally. The signs are that this new emphasis is already being noticed and welcomed by the Areas. As a public service responsible for spending £0.3 billion of public funds each year and accountable to Parliament there must be accounting and monitoring systems. The DPP and Chief Executive are continuing to work together to ensure that the central demands made of Areas are reviewed and that bureaucracy is minimised.

The Glidewell Report acknowledged that there would continue to be a need for a structure separate to the local Areas responsible for handling the most serious and sensitive of cases which require resources not normally available in CPS Areas. The Report recommended two separate but parallel management structures to handle this category of casework. First, a central pool and secondly a national network of CPS staff with a division of the casework between the two and each reporting into CPS headquarters. These recommendations have been accepted in principle but with the CPS taking forward a proposal that there should be a single management structure for this category of casework embracing both the central pool and the national network of CPS staff reporting into CPS headquarters. This will provide a cohesive framework for prosecuting this category of cases with a clear line of responsibility and answerability.

The move to 42 CPS Areas coterminous with police force areas is a significant opportunity for the CPS and other criminal justice agencies to work together locally to deliver the Government's objectives for the criminal justice system as a whole, namely, to reduce crime and to deliver justice fairly and effectively. The structure of local criminal justice liaison bodies is being revised, as the Glidewell Report recommended, to take account of the 42 Area structure. A joint measure and targets on the timeliness in dealing with cases through the prosecution process are being established to complement existing targets for improving the time taken to prosecute persistent young offenders. Joint targets reinforce the message that agencies must work together to make the whole system more effective, not just to improve individual parts sometimes to the detriment of other agencies.

Accepting another of the recommendations, work is progressing to identify common casework statistics so that meaningful comparisons can be made agency-by-agency, facilitating a better understanding of how the system is working.

I announced in November that the Glidewell Report recommendations concerning the CPS Inspectorate were accepted with some modifications. I can now announce that the Government propose to put the Inspectorate on an independent statutory basis as soon as the legislative timetable permits. With this in mind, a new Chief Inspector, Stephen Wooler, took up his post in March of this year. He is driving forward the work necessary to the reform of the Inspectorate which will enhance its independence, expand its role and responsibilities and thereby provide the scrutiny of the Service which will support public confidence in the CPS.

Two other key initiatives have inter-acted with the Glidewell report. First the Narey reforms for reducing delay in the criminal justice system, and, secondly, the publication of the criminal justice system's Strategic Plan and Business Plan published as a response to the two strategic objectives set by the Government. Additionally, the Glidewell reforms of the CPS must take into account the Government's response to the recommendations contained in Sir William Macpherson's Report of his inquiry into the murder of Stephen Lawrence. This is not the moment to focus on each of these matters. Suffice it to say that they, along with the Glidewell reforms and the move to 42 CPS Areas, represent a key theme of this administration, namely the modernisation of public service by developing a cohesive and coherent approach to policy with agencies and Departments working together for the benefit of the community as a whole. This approach will, I believe, deliver a modern criminal justice system worthy of that title.

The cultural, structural and organisational changes that are happening to the CPS must be carefully managed. A lesson of the past is that a rush to change is a recipe for error. Whilst I intend proper progress will be made I also intend the changes to be managed with care, ensuring that we get it right for society as a whole while being sensitive to CPS staff.

I am pleased to take this opportunity of commending all those who have worked together so hard to take forward the recommendations. I include, of course, not only members of the CPS but those of other agencies and Government Departments within the criminal justice system. The good-will and determination to work together to make for a better system has enabled brisk progress to be made on what is a substantial initiative within the criminal justice system.

As superintending Minister for the CPS I pay particular tribute to all members of CPS staff who have faced a period of uncertainty with professional resolve. The reforms will, I believe, enhance their individual roles, increase their job satisfaction, and lead to improved morale.

I believe that the Glidewell reforms have laid a sure foundation for a better Crown Prosecution Service and a better criminal justice system working for the benefit of the community. The CPS has embarked on its new start; by taking forward Sir Iain Glidewell's recommendations it is well on the road to fulfilling what Sir Iain described as its potential to become a lively, successful and esteemed part of the criminal justice system.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Attorney-General on what date his Department was first informed that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88798]

The Attorney-General: As is now known, a lawyer in my office read an article in Criminal Law Week suggesting that the provisions were not in force. This was drawn to the attention of the Home Office and following a request for advice I reached the view on 17 June that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Portadown)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the distance between Portadown RUC station and the location of the attack on 27 April 1997 on the late Robert Hamill. [85502]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC have advised that the distance a person would have to travel between these locations is around 250m.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Royal Ulster Constabulary officers were on duty within Portadown RUC Sub-Division between 11 pm on Saturday 26 April 1997 and 4 am on Sunday 27 April 1997. [85501]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC have advised that there were 19 police officers on duty in Portadown Sub-Division between 11.00 pm on Saturday 26 April 1997 and 4.00 am on Sunday 27 April 1997.

Location of Victims' Remains

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her review of the operations to locate the disappeared in Northern Ireland. [88335]

Mr. Ingram: The Agreement between the United Kingdom and Irish Governments signed on 27 April includes a formal reporting mechanism. The Agreement requires the Independent Commission for the Location of Victims' Remains to report to both Governments on its activities no later than one year after its establishment and annually thereafter. Through that formal mechanism, the two Governments will be in a position to review the operation of the Commission's activities. At this time, developments at the search sites are being followed with close interest and we continue to hope that the remains of the victims will be located.

Young Offenders

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to replace the open provision juvenile justice Provisions by a single closed provision at Lisnevin Centre; when she expects to announce her decision on the provision; and what assessment she has made of the option of retaining open provision facilities for children in the Province. [88467]

Mr. Ingram: Following recent changes in the law relating to juvenile offenders, only the most serious or persistent offenders can be placed in custody. Most boys in custody are held in the only secure accommodation available—this is at Lisnevin. There has been a significant fall in the numbers in custody due to this legislation and also the introduction of a new determinate sentence and there is considerable spare capacity in the system. A review of the need for custodial places—both open and secure—is being carried out. The outcome of the review will be published in due course.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date her Department was first informed that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88800]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Office was first so informed on 21 June 1999.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

42. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the President of the Council what steps the Government are taking to inform the public on the principal issues relating to the millennium date change. [87242]

Mrs. Beckett: As part of the Government's continuing public information programme, "The Millennium Bug—Facts Not Fiction" booklet has been produced and widely distributed earlier this month. The quarterly returns of Government Departments, agencies and key parts of the wider public sector are available too on the Internet, as is the Government-commissioned tracking research of public perceptions of the Bug. Preparations across the national infrastructure are being brought together and disclosed through the National Infrastructure Forum.

Privy Council Meetings

44. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on arrangements for convening meetings of the Privy Council. [87244]

Mrs. Beckett: The Queen normally holds a meeting of the Council every month except January, August and September. Additional Councils are convened if urgent business requires it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EU Question Time

43. Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to institute a separate ministerial question period for European Union matters. [87243]

Mr. Tipping: European Union matters feature in questions to virtually every Department and so are answered on the Floor of the House every sitting day. I do not think it would be either practical or desirable to confine such questions to a single, separate period or to create an additional period just for such questions.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Council on what date her Department was first informed that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88799]

Mrs. Beckett: On 18 June 1999.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russian Military

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian Federation Government concerning the level of civilian control over its military; and if he will make a statement. [88330]

Ms Quin: The Prime Minister discussed the rapid deployment of Russian paratroops to Pristina with Russian Prime Minister Stepashin at the G8 Cologne Summit on 18 June. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised this incident with Foreign Minister Ivanov on 13 June. The Russians agreed that trust is important for closer co-operation between our forces on the ground in Kosovo. We have also supported training courses for the Russian military on civilian and democratic management of the armed forces.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date his Department was first informed that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88794]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Home Office informed the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 21 June 1999.

Ethiopia–Eritrea (Conflict)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning casualties from the conflict in Ethiopia and Eritrea. [88359]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have seen differing reports of casualties throughout the conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea. We have no reliable figures, but estimate that total casualties are high on both sides: approximately 40,000 Ethiopian and 20,000 Eritrean.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of (a) Ethiopia and (b) Eritrea, concerning the conflict between the two countries. [88360]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have always supported UN and OAU efforts to resolve the conflict. I discussed the issues with the OAU Secretary General on 28 May and with the UN Secretary General on 25 June. I have also discussed the war with the Ethiopian Foreign Minister and Deputy Foreign Minister and the Ambassadors of Ethiopia and Eritrea in recent months. Our message has been clear: both sides must stop fighting immediately and implement the OAU Framework peace proposals.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the meeting of the heads of seven African states in Pretoria on 17 June to discuss the civil war in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. [88358]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Reports from the region reinforce our view that the meeting was a positive step in preparation for a regional summit scheduled to take place in Lusaka. If real progress is to be made there all parties will need to show the political will and commitment to achieve a peaceful, negotiated settlement to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

PRIME MINISTER

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister how many public interest immunity certificates have been issued by Ministers or their officials since 1 May 1997; and if he will list the occasions on which such certificates have been issued. [85359]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General's statement on 11 July 1997, Official Report, columns 616–17, made clear that, in accordance with the approach adopted by the previous Government, public interest immunity will not be asserted by the Government unless the relevant Minister believes that disclosure of a document or piece of information will cause real damage to the public interest and that this test would be applied rigorously.

Where public interest immunity applies, the Government's policy is to make voluntary disclosure if it considers that the interest of justice outweighs the public interest in withholding the document or information in question. In all cases a claim for public interest immunity is subject to the power of the court or other tribunal to order disclosure.

Prior to 1 May 1997, no centrally maintained record for Government public interest immunity certificates was kept. However, on the best information available from a trawl of the main relevant Departments, I can disclose that PII certificates have been issued and other parties notified on the following number of occasions:

Year	Home Departments [1]	NIO	FCO
1997	15	5	1
1999 (to date)	4	8	1

[1] Prior to 1997, DTI, MOD and HO only are included; after 1997, all relevant Departments

[2] 13 of the 20 cases in 1998 relate to a single occasion involving the movement of 13 prisoners with HMP Belfast

Honours List

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many nominations for honours in respect of the most recent Honours List were received broken down by each English county; and what percentage were successful. [87352]

The Prime Minister: Each year the Nominations Unit receive in excess of 7,000 nominations direct from members of the public. In addition, Government Departments will have received several thousand nominations from national organisations and members of the public. Information on nominations is not held in a form which relates them to particular counties or particular Honours Lists. Nor is it normal practice to release information about nominations.

However, my hon. Friend may wish to refer to the 1999 Birthday Honours List within the features section in the News Centre on the No.10 Downing Street website (http://www.number-10.gov.uk/index.html) which contains information about those who have received honours.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister at what level of command the decision was made to supply Russian troops occupying the airport at Pristina; and what items were supplied in what quantities. [88465]

The Prime Minister: Following receipt of a request from the commander of the Russian forces in Kosovo, Commander KFOR, Lieutenant General Mike Jackson, took the decision to provide the supplies that were needed. The priority was for bottled water, and 15,000 litres were supplied on 16 June. In addition, a small number of maps of the local area were provided. Offers of fuel and medication were turned down by the Russians.

EU Charter of Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his priorities for the inclusion of topics in an EU charter of rights. [88608]

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary told the House on 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 118, we welcome this initiative. We believe that the Charter should make the fundamental rights which already exist and are applicable at Union level more visible to the Union's citizens. The incoming Finnish Presidency has been given responsibility for taking this work forward and we look forward to working with them.

Wal-Mart

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Prime Minister what communications (a) by telephone or (b) directly he received from the White House relating to his meeting with the Chief Executive Officer of Wal-Mart. [88700]

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Prime Minister if (1) during his meeting this year with the Chief Executive Officer of Wal-Mart, there was discussion of planning matters; [88697]

(2) what other Ministers were present at his meeting with the Chief Executive Officer of Wal-Mart; [88698]

(3) for what reason the Minister for Trade was not present at his meeting with the Chief Executive Officer of Wal-Mart; [88699]

(4) what discussions he has had about the planning issue raised during his meeting with the Chief Executive Officer of Wal-Mart with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. [88707]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 6 May 1999, Official Report, columns 451–52.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many meetings he has had with representatives of the American Government where the proposed merger of Wal-Mart with Asda was discussed; [88508]

(2) how many meetings his staff have had with representatives of the American Government where the proposed merger of Wal-Mart with Asda was discussed; [88509]

(3) how many meetings (a) he and (b) his staff have had with representatives of Wal-Mart in connection with their proposed merger with Asda. [88803]

The Prime Minister: None.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister on what date (a) he and (b) his Office were first informed that

Parts IV A and IV B of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88731]

The Prime Minister: My office was informed on 18 June. I received an updated briefing note on Monday on my return from the Cologne European Council.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rural Bus Services

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library figures for each relevant local authority in England of the number of (a) new bus services and (b) enhancements to existing bus services in rural areas which have resulted from the use of rural bus subsidy grant; and if he will give examples for each authority of such new and enhanced services. [82636]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information provided by each local authority has been placed in the Library. It shows that the first year of this new grant has been a success with a total in England alone of 658 new services and 842 enhanced services as a result of the grant's introduction.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what subsidies have been provided to (a) Shropshire County Council and (b) Telford & Wrekin Council to support rural bus services in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000. [88148]

Ms Glenda Jackson: 1998–99 was the first year of the new Rural Bus Subsidy Grant. In that year Shropshire County Council and Telford & Wrekin Council were allocated the sums of £630,354 and £76,048 respectively, for the support of rural buses. The same amounts have been allocated for 1999–2000.

Multi-modal Transport Study (London and South-West Corridor)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account the multi-modal study of the London to South West Corridor announced in the Trunk Roads Review will take of the Railtrack report on the feasibility of reducing the peripherality of the western extremities of the rail network. [86197]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A key objective of the London to South West and South Wales multi-modal study is to examine the scope for reducing congestion by better management and modal shift. The study will, therefore, encompass the main rail routes, and assess the potential for encouraging the transfer of passenger and freight trips from road to rail. The Railtrack report has already indicated that the railway to Penzance can be upgraded to provide higher speeds with corresponding reductions in journey times to London, reducing the peripherality of the far south-west. The report also considers enhancement of the freight gauge and the provision of intermodal terminals. We will ensure that its findings are taken into account in the multi-modal study.

Coastguard (Donaldson Report)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the terms of reference are for Lord Donaldson's report on the future of coastguard stations; when Lord Donaldson was asked to advise his Department; when the report will be completed; and if it will be made available to the public. [87194]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Lord Donaldson's Terms of Reference were set by agreement with the Trade Unions and management of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency.

Lord Donaldson accepted the Terms of Reference in early May and he will reply to the Deputy Prime Minister as soon as possible.

Local Authority Publicity

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend legislation regarding the code of practice on local authority publicity so that local authorities must not only have regard to this code but actively enforce it. [88075]

Mr. Meale: We have no plans to amend the legislation on the Code of Recommended Practice on Local Authority Publicity. In the paper "Local Leadership, Local Choice", laid before the House on 24 March 1999 (Cm 4298), we have made proposals, including a draft Bill, for a new framework to deliver high standards in all aspects of conduct throughout local government.

Highways Agency Estate

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the surplus properties held by the Highways Agency are held for road schemes that have been cancelled. [88088]

Mrs. Liddell: The Highways Agency currently holds 563 surplus properties on cancelled schemes. The Agency sells all its surplus property through a phased disposals programme which is designed to ensure the greatest return to the public purse, while not flooding any local property market. Existing tenancies are honoured and in some cases it will be necessary to complete statutory procedures, such as the making of revocation orders, before property can be sold.

Road Schemes

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which road schemes are (a) currently in progress and (b) planned for the next two years on motorways and trunk roads. [88112]

Mrs. Liddell: The major new schemes currently under construction are listed. Those we plan to start in the next two financial years are listed. In addition we plan this year to spend £765 million on maintenance and £187 million on making better use of the existing motorway and trunk road network.

Motor Vehicle Tax Rises

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the effect has been on the annual costs of his Department of the changes in fuel duty and vehicle licence fees since May 1997. [88089]

Mrs. Liddell: This information is not available. Records are not kept centrally.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) on how many days over the last six months he has used (a) a car, (b) a bus and (c) a train for his official duties; [88101]

(2) on how many occasions in the last six months he has travelled to work at his office by (a) car and (b) public transport. [88097]

Mr. Prescott: I travel by car and by public transport on a regular basis on my official visits and journeys to my office.

Ministers are required under the Ministerial Code to always make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements.

London Underground

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are (a) the cost to date and (b) the anticipated future cost of legal, financial and other professional advice in respect of the Public-Private Partnership for the London Underground. [88102]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 12 May 1999, Official Report, columns 154–55. We have made a commitment to provide the House with updated figures at six monthly intervals. London Transport will not know the overall requirements or costs for external advice until the Public-Private Partnership (PPP) transaction has been completed, but the Government are working together with LT to ensure that we receive the best advice while minimising the overall costs of implementing the PPP.

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many public sector houses for rent are currently empty. [88098]

Ms Armstrong: On 1 April 1998 there were an estimated 95,300 vacant public sector properties in England.

Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when each of the urban development corporations was wound up; and what residual costs fall to be paid in 1999–2000. [88065]

Mr. Caborn: The following urban development corporations ceased operations on 31 March 1998 and were dissolved on 1 July 1998:

Birmingham Heartlands

Black Country

London Docklands

Merseyside

Plymouth

Teesside

Trafford Park

Tyne and Wear.

Residual property, rights and liabilities were transferred to the Commission for the New Towns, now part of English Partnerships (EP). Its budget for unavoidable liability costs in 1999–2000 amounts to £24.2 million.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if additional money beyond the £300 million so far allocated to the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme will be required to provide the average grant to the number of homes given in his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 88, and to make grants at equivalent levels in Scotland and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [88151]

Mr. Meale: The estimated average grants under the proposed New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) are based on the use of seven year operating leases to fund the installation of central heating systems under New HEES Plus. They include the full cost of the lease over the term.

The resources allocated to this area cover the estimated number of properties improved through New HEES and also the separate programmes in Scotland and Wales in 2000–01 and 2001–02, including the operating lease charges during these years.

The nature of the separate programmes in Scotland and Wales is a matter for the Parliament and the Assembly respectively.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, columns 88–89, what obligation will there be under the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme to target the most vulnerable households. [88154]

Mr. Meale: The objective of the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme is to target the most vulnerable households, and this will be carried through the operation of the scheme and the specification for work set for scheme managers.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, columns 88–89, if the figures for average value of grant-assisted work given there included administrative costs. [88150]

Mr. Meale: They do not include administrative costs incurred by scheme managers but include those incurred by installers.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 87, what value of grant-assisted work was assumed in his model to calculate the reduced heating costs for an average three bedroom semi-detached house. [88155]

Mr. Meale: Under the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES), the value of the work on each individual property will be up to £700 in the case of New HEES, and up to £1,800 with New HEES Plus, depending on the energy efficiency of the property prior to improvement.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 87, what is the basis for his statement that New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme and New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme Plus will substantially move households out of fuel poverty. [88157]

Mr. Meale: Our view that the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) and New HEES Plus will substantially move households out of fuel poverty is based on a careful assessment of the fuel cost savings which householders will derive from the comprehensive packages of assistance provided.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the expenditure required (i) per household and (ii) for all households in England, to achieve a minimum SAP rating of 30, and a minimum SAP increase in houses included for treatment of 10 points, in all homes with a current SAP rating of (a) less than 10, (b) less than 20, and (c) less than 30. [88156]

Mr. Meale: Estimates of the expenditure required were published in the English House Condition Survey 1991, Energy Report, SO 1996. (Page 225, Table 19.4). A similar analysis using data from the 1996 English House Condition Survey is planned.

Household Projections (Hampshire)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the projected estimate of the number of new households in Hampshire in 2016 (a) in 1992 and (b) at the most recent date; and if he will make a statement. [88121]

Mr. Raynsford: The 1992-based household projections gave a projection of 0.783 million households for Hampshire for 2016. Preliminary information on counties from the 1996-based household projections was sent to Regional Planning Conferences in May. These new figures show a projected 0.81 million households in Hampshire in 2016.

Out-of-town Supermarkets

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of car journeys made to out-of-town supermarkets in the last year for which figures are available. [88328]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Data are not available on the number of car journeys made to out-of-town supermarkets.

Local Authority Housing (Single Mothers)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities do not make housing provision for single mothers under the age of 18 years. [88393]

Mr. Raynsford: Under Part VII of the Housing Act 1996 (the homelessness legislation), all housing authorities are obliged to secure temporary housing for homeless single mothers under the age of 18 years if they are not intentionally homeless and there is no other suitable accommodation available for them to occupy in the district. Local authorities are also empowered to allocate housing under Part VI of the 1996 Act to people on their housing registers. Information on the number of local housing authorities who make provision of housing for young single mothers through their housing registers is not held centrally.

Walking

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many officials in his Department are directly employed promoting walking policies; and what proportion this figure represents of the total number of people employed by his Department. [88163]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Work in support of walking policies, including research, accounts for the whole of one post and a significant part of nine others. On 1 April 1999 there were 3,450 full-time equivalent civil servants working in DETR (Central).

A5/M1 Link (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional funding he plans to make available for the A5/M1 link road in Bedfordshire. [88171]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The possible A5/M1 link road in Bedfordshire would form part of the Luton Northern Bypass, which is a major long-term local authority scheme. Bedfordshire County Council and Luton Borough Council are currently working on a joint 5-year local transport plan submission for the area. I understand that the Translink public transport scheme is likely to be their highest priority major project.

In the Trunk Road Review the A5 Dunstable Bypass and the M1 Junction 6A-10 Widening were included in the London to South Midlands Study area—which is in the Tranche 2 of the Government funded study programme. The study will address a range of transport issues including motorway congestion, development pressures and access to major urban areas such as Luton and Dunstable and possible local solutions including any A5/M1 Link North of Dunstable.

Rail Services (North Kent)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with Railtrack regarding the introduction of 12 car trains between North Kent and London; [88203]

(2) what discussions he has had with Railtrack regarding the introduction of trackside equipment to allow North Kent Networker trains to make use of their REGEN braking system; [88202]

(3) what discussion he has had with Railtrack regarding the upgrading of the power supply on North Kent lines to allow longer trains to run; [88204]

(4) what discussions he has held with Railtrack regarding the completion of new track signalling systems for North Kent commuter lines. [88201]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for Railtrack who are currently discussing with OPRAF and Connex the options for introducing 12 car trains between North Kent and London and the related issues of new track signalling systems, upgrading the power supply and facilitating the use of REGEN braking system in Networker trains.

Station Refurbishment

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to require a train operating company to implement a refurbishment of a particular station. [88401]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Train operating companies are obliged to meet certain minimum standards at stations which are set out in their franchise agreements. These do not cover refurbishment of stations which is primarily the responsibility of Railtrack with the train operating companies.

Millennium Dome (Transport Links)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on transport links and access to the Millennium Dome from East London and Essex. [87234]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Millennium Experience will be a 'car free' event, with parking at the Dome site restricted to Orange Badge Holders only and extensive parking controls in place on and around the Greenwich peninsula. The transport strategy devised for the Experience therefore focuses on access to the Dome site being made by public transport.

For visitors travelling from East London and Essex, the most convenient public transport route will be travel by surface rail to either Stratford or West Ham stations, or where appropriate the Docklands Light Railway to Canning Town station, and transfer on to the extended Jubilee Line to make the short journey to North Greenwich station, which is located adjacent to the entrance of the Dome site.

For visitors who seek to make the first leg of their journey by car, the New Millennium Experience Company is intending to manage a small number of formal park and ride facilities around London at which a limited number of visitors each day, who pre-book in advance, will be able to leave their vehicles before completing their journey on convenient public transport links. For visitors travelling from East London and Essex, the most convenient park and ride facility will be the proposed site in the north east sector of London which, subject to planning permission, will be located at Stratford. Visitors parking at the Stratford site would be transferred the short distance to Stratford station by shuttle bus, where they would again take the extended Jubilee Line to North Greenwich Station.

House Building (Green-field Land)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the amount of green-field land that will be required to meet the Government's targets for new house-building by (a) 2010 and (b) 2015. [88785]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government does not set targets for new house-building. Housing requirements are derived both locally and regionally and land for housing is allocated through the planning process. The Government's target is that 60 per cent. of additional housing should be built on previously developed land or should re-use existing buildings.

Charity Shops (Rate Relief)

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the Government have made of the effects of rate relief granted to charity shops on the development of small and medium-sized towns. [88615]

Mr. Meale: No assessment has been made of the effects of granting rate relief to charity shops. However, as part of the Treasury's overall review of charity taxation my Department is considering whether there is a need to issue further guidance to local authorities to ensure that only those charity shops which 'wholly or mainly' sell donated goods receive rate relief.

Specialist Shops (Local Government Assistance)

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial assistance is available through local government to support small and specialist shops in small and medium-sized towns; and if he will make a statement. [88616]

Mr. Meale: There is no specific financial assistance available for small and specialist shops in small or medium sized towns. The Single Regeneration Budget (SRB) does fund comprehensive regeneration schemes put forward by local partnerships (which may include local authorities) in deprived areas. These schemes usually have multiple objectives and it is not possible to quantify their benefit to particular business groups. However, small shops may benefit from schemes which assist business start-ups, living over the shop, environmental improvements and provision of security measures.

The Government are considering measures to reduce the rate burden on small businesses as was stated in our White Paper "Modern Local Government—In touch with the People" published last July. We intend to consult further on proposals in the autumn.

Horse Riders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish proposals permitting horse riders to use certain footpaths; and if he will make a statement. [88351]

Mr. Meacher: We are considering recommendations for improvements to rights of way legislation submitted by the Countryside Commission (now the Countryside Agency) and expect to issue a consultation paper shortly.

London and South Wales Multi-modal Study

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account the London and South Wales multi-modal study has taken of the report by MDS Transmodal on the benefits of increasing the gauge to allow piggyback freight. [88736]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The study will address these issues.

EU Regional Chambers

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 10 June 1999, Official Report, column 377, who appoints the members of European Regional Chambers; what are their duties; with what other regional bodies they are in partnership; by what tests they are considered suitable for designation under the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998; and what further responsibilities arise from that designation. [88686]

Mr. Caborn: As I said in my answer on 10 June 1999, Official Report, column 377, regional chambers have no formal status in relation to the European Union; they are therefore not "European" regional chambers.

Regional chambers are voluntary partnerships formed by local authorities and other regional stakeholders with an interest in the economic, social, and environmental well-being of the region. Membership is decided by the stakeholders themselves. However, for the chamber to achieve designation the basis for the selection of the membership must meet criteria set out in the White Paper 'Building Partnerships for Prosperity' published in December 1997, and general principles set out in further guidance issued by the Department in August 1998. The White Paper criteria and the further guidance also cover non-membership issues. Copies are in the Library.

The Regional Development Agencies Act 1998 imposes no duties or responsibilities on regional chambers but designation enables them to play a consultative and scrutiny role in relation to the Regional Development Agencies. The Government also believe that regional chambers are well placed to take over the role of regional planning bodies, but it is for the existing planning bodies to decide whether and how this should be done.

Otherwise, it is for the regional chambers themselves, as voluntary partnerships, to decide their own work programmes and the extent of their partnership activity.

SCOTLAND

Salmon Fishery Boards

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to restructure the district salmon fishery boards; and if he will make a statement. [87691]

Mr. Macdonald: The District Salmon Fishery Boards Order 1999 came into effect on 3 May. It replaced the previous provisions of Schedule 2 of the Salmon Act 1986 on the composition of district salmon fishery boards, allowing boards greater freedom to determine optimum size and structure for themselves. The Order will facilitate mergers of boards, through offering the scope for pooling resources and promoting more science-based fisheries management in line with the Report of the Scottish Salmon Strategy Task Force. A number of boards have already elected to take advantage of the new Order and this is reflected in the Lochaber Salmon Fishery District Designation Order 1999, the Conon Salmon Fishery District Designation Order 1999 and the North and West Salmon Fishery District Designation Order 1999.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Oncologists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many clinical and medical oncologists are employed per head of population in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [87869]

Dr. Reid: The information available is shown in the table.

Medical and clinical oncologists employed in the NHS in Scotland (30 September 1998)

	Headcount	WTE [1]	Rate per 100,000 population Headcount	WTE [1]
Medical oncologists	38	30.7	0.74	0.60
Clinical oncologists	75	70.3	1.46	1.37

[1] Whole-time equivalent

Source:
Information and Statistics Division of the Common Services Agency

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to cap local authority spending in the current year. [89115]

Dr. Reid: None. This year we fulfilled our Manifesto commitment to abolish crude and universal capping; instead Scottish local authorities were issued with indicative expenditure guidelines. Most authorities have exercised their new discretion sensibly. Eight authorities have set budgets in excess of the guideline, although in most cases by small amounts. Three authorities have made large increases; they are East Dunbartonshire, Aberdeenshire and Perth and Kinross.

I have consulted the First Minister, who will be responsible for this matter after 1 July. We have decided not to cap any authorities this year. However we have called in the three authorities named above to discuss why they have made such large increases and put them on warning that we will expect them to return to guideline next year.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists (North Glamorgan)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what estimate he has of the number of patients within the North Glamorgan Trust who are awaiting cardiac surgery (a) at the University of Wales Hospital and (b) at Morriston Hospital; and what is the average waiting time for each list; [86834]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of patients with the North Glamorgan Trust who are awaiting orthopaedic surgery (a) at the University of Wales Hospital and (b) at Morriston Hospital; and what is the average waiting time for each list. [86835]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data are not held centrally on the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient or day case treatment in one NHS trust following an out-patient consultation in a hospital of another NHS trust.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Community Hospital, Porthmadog

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the letter from Keith Blake of the Health Services and Management Division of the Welsh Office, addressed to Gwynfor Hughes of Porthmadog, dated 9 June, in relation to the future of the proposals for the new community hospital at Porthmadog. [88588]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Department's letter of 9 June set out the current position regarding funding for the North Merionydd/East Dwyfor Community Hospital scheme.

An Outline Business Case for the new hospital was approved by the Department in February 1999 and the scheme was considered for public funding in 1999–2000.

The Secretary of State's spending decisions for 1999–2000 made provision of £83 million for NHS capital expenditure to complete on-going schemes and for discretionary capital expenditure by Trusts. Funding was not allocated to this scheme.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the business plan submitted by North Wales Heath Authority for a new community hospital to serve North Meirionydd and Eastern Dwyfor was accepted by his Department; and what the current position is with regard to this project. [88620]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Outline Business Case for the North Merionydd/East Dwyfor Community Hospital was formally approved by the Department in February 1999.

Funding has not been allocated for this project to commence in 1999–2000.

I am unable to comment on the funding position for 2000–01.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it is his Department's policy that the decision on whether to include in the 1999–2000 Capital Programme provision for a new community hospital to serve North Meirionnydd and Eastern Dwyfor, at Porthmadog, is a matter for the North Wales Health Authority. [88619]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: It is a matter for the North Wales Health Authority to decide if it wishes to continue its support for the provision of a new Community Hospital at Porthmadog.

The Department's policy is that NHS Trusts must provide confirmation of Health Authority support before a Business Case can be approved.

North Wales Health Authority did support in full the proposals from Gwynedd Community Health NHS Trust for the new Community Hospital at Porthmadog, and the Outline Business Case was subsequently approved by the Department and the scheme was considered for public funding in 1999–2000.

The Health Authority has confirmed that its position remains unchanged and it will continue to support the Trust's proposals.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textphones

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current number of public textphones; and what plans Her Majesty's Government have to increase the level of provision. [88411]

Mr. Wills: There are currently 84 public textphones in the country, provided by BT. The Government are planning to consult on the provision of public textphones in a consultation later this year on improving access to telecommunications for the disabled. This is part of its further implementation of the Revised Voice Telephony Directive (98/10/EC). This should result in an increase in the provision of public textphones, especially in places such as railway stations and shopping centres.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors, indicating those which are in operation. [88398]

Mr. Battle: The RBMK (Chernobyl-type) nuclear reactors of which we are aware are Chernobyl 1–2, Chernobyl 3*, Ignalina 1, Ignalina 2*, Kursk 1–4*, Kursk 5 (under construction), Leningrad (Sosnovy Bor) 1–4* and Smolensk 1–3*. Those marked with an asterix are in operation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the safety of remaining Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors; and if he will make a statement on programmes of remedial action to which Her Majesty's Government have contributed. [88397]

Mr. Battle: The UK continues to work with our G7 and European partners to improve nuclear safety in the countries concerned. This is undertaken through a number of multilateral assistance programmes funded through the G7 Nuclear Safety Account (NSA), International Atomic Energy Authority (IAEA) Technical Co-operation Programme and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development managed Chernobyl Shelter Fund. The UK also funds a bilateral programme of activities through its Nuclear Safety and Health Budget which is administered by the DTI.

The most recent assessment of the safety of Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors was undertaken in June at the IAEA in Vienna where there was a meeting of strengthening nuclear safety in Eastern Europe. All nuclear countries who operate Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors (RBMK) attended along with leading international organisations that provide nuclear safety assistance to them. The meeting concluded that there is no question that considerable progress on nuclear safety has been made in Eastern Europe and in their operation of nuclear power plants where they have demonstrated clear progress in operational safety improvements.

Papers distributed at the meeting and copies of the presentations can be accessed through the IAEA website.

Electricity Generation

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what way the climate change levy will promote the efficient generation of electricity; and if he will make a statement. [88200]

Mr. Battle: The proposed climate change levy will be levied downstream on energy supplied to industrial and commercial users. This will ensure that domestic consumption of energy is excluded. Since it is a downstream tax there will be relatively little impact on the mix of fuels used, and efficiency, in generation.

However, the Government are looking closely at the possibility of exempting new forms of renewable energy, like wind power, from the levy. The consultation document issued by Customs and Excise sought views on whether, and if so, how this could be done. The treatment of Combined Heat and Power plants is also being considered. In addition, the Government have announced that there will be an extra £50 million a year for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and additional support for renewables.

Finally, the White Paper, "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation", sets out the Government's broad energy policy, including radical reforms to the electricity market. These reforms will bring greater competition to electricity generation and lower prices for consumers.

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a breakdown of (a) the current emission levels and (b) the estimated emission levels following the introduction of the climate change levy by industrial sector; and if he will make a statement. [88300]

Mr. Battle: The following table showing 1997 emissions of greenhouse gases by source was published by the Department of the Environment Transport and the Regions on 13 May 1999. Emission levels by industry following the introduction of the climate change levy will depend upon the structure and rate of the levy. However, in total the levy is expected to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010 thereby making a significant contribution to meeting both the legally binding target for reducing greenhouse gas emissions set under the Kyoto protocol and the Government's domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010.

[1] Removals of CO_2 reported as negative.

[2] To express in terms of weight of carbon emitted the figures for emissions and removals of CO_2 should be multiplied by 12–44.

[3] Includes emissions from own-energy gas use on offshore installations.

[4] Combustion emissions of CO_2 from iron and steel are included in "manufacturing industries and construction". Process emissions from the iron and steel industry are included in "metal production". Limestone use in the iron and steel industry is classified under "mineral products".

[8] Emissions from stationary combustion at military installations are reported under "other sectors".

[10] Fugitive emissions of CO_2 from coke ovens and patent fuel production are calculated according to a carbon balance on the coal consumed and the coke, patent fuel, blast furnace gas and coke oven gas produced. Emissions from flaring of coke oven gas are also included.

Electrolysis Process

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of people employed (a) directly and (b) indirectly in UK companies who use the electrolysis process; and if he will make a statement. [88197]

Mr. Battle: This information is not available from official statistics. One of the main industries which uses electrolysis is the chloralkali industry, and estimates from the Chemical Industries Association for employment in the chloralkali industry suggest that 4,000 people are directly employed in this industry.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the amount of energy used by UK companies in the electrolysis process within the chemical industry; and if he will make a statement. [88173]

Mr. Battle: ETSU, part of AEA Technology, estimate that 16 peta joules of energy were used in the manufacture of chlorine through the electrolysis process in the UK in 1990. This represented roughly 1 per cent. of the amount of energy used by manufacturing industry in 1990. No later information is available and it should be noted that the figures for energy consumption for the manufacture of chlorine through the electrolysis process may have changed significantly since 1990.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes the Government plan in the extent of assisted areas coverage. [88111]

Mr. Wills: We will announce the results of the review as soon as we are ready to do so.

Utilities (Consumption)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the percentage increase in the consumption of oil, gas and electricity by (a) industry and (b) the general public since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [88000]

Mr. Battle: The percentage changes in, and levels of, final consumption of fuels between 1990 and 1998 are as follows:

	Petroleum	Gas [2]	Electricity	Coal [3]	Total

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many validating doctors to examine claims for vibration white finger have been approved; and if he will list the location of each of these doctors. [87454]

Mr. Battle: Many claims received by the Department are accompanied by reports from Vascular Consultants. However, many of these reports contain insufficient detail on which to assess a claim. The Department is making offers on the basis of reports, wherever possible, but only where we are satisfied that the resulting offer is fair and properly reflects the individual's entitlement. The Department has satisfied itself that it can make offers based on the reports of 19 consultants. These consultants are based in Chesterfield, Sheffield, Doncaster, Nottingham, Cardiff, Dundee, Newcastle Upon Tyne, Paisley, Washington Tyne and Wear and Edinburgh.

The Department has always made clear to the plaintiff solicitors that making offers, based on acceptable consultant's reports, was an interim measure to allow payments to be made until the tendering process for the delivery of the agreed Medical Assessment Process (MAP) was completed. We hope to award the contract for the delivery of the medical assessments shortly and are hopeful that significant offers of full and final payments will start flowing in the late summer.

Agricultural and Pharmaceutical Biotechnology Industries

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of people employed in the (a) agricultural and (b) pharmaceutical biotechnology industry in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000. [87769]

Mr. Battle: This information is not available from official statistics.

A report published earlier this year by the BioIndustry Association[1] estimates employment in dedicated biotechnology companies to be between 35–40,000 (with the sector growing annually by over 20 per cent. over the period 1995–98). Of these it estimates that 8–10,000 are employed in the biopharmaceuticals sector, and 3,000 in the biotechnology dedicated area of agriculture.

In addition there is a significant number of people engaged in biotechnology related-work among the 60,000 UK employees of established pharmaceutical companies[2] and the 615,000 employed in the UK agriculture sector[3].

"Processing the Future"

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government are preparing to implement the recommendation of the report of the Foresight Process Industry Group, "Processing the Future". [87266]

Mr. Battle: The Process Industry Group has made a valuable contribution to the Foresight programme. We welcome their "Processing the Future" report. We are pleased that they are willing to develop their ideas in the second round of Foresight. These will be of special interest to the new Manufacturing 2020 and Chemicals Foresight Panels.

The Government emphasised the importance which it attaches to multi-disciplinary research and closer joint working between the Research Councils in allocating the Science Budget last autumn. The Research Councils are implementing these policies, and are taking account of the report's recommendations in their planning.

As the process industries are so diverse, there is a wide range of innovation initiatives supported by Government and the Research Councils. For example, 21 per cent. of the Engineering and Physical Science Research Council's research grant support is of relevance to process industries. EPSRC also have a number of joint activities in the process industries with other Research Councils. These include the process industries sector of the Innovative Manufacturing Initiative (EPSRC with the Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Council), Biomolecular Science (BBSRC) and a Medical Engineering LINK programme (EPSRC, BBSRC and the Medical Research Council). In the chemicals sector (perhaps the biggest process industry), DTI and EPSRC support initiatives on process plant instrumentation, catalysis, polymer processing and colloid technology.

Since the publication of the report, we have engaged trade associations from across the processing industries in discussions on the implications of the report. PIG members have made presentations to various learned societies and industrial sectors. As they refine their ideas within the Foresight agenda, we will play close attention to developments.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Family Mediation

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the availability of legal aid for family mediation under the provisions of the Access to Justice Bill [Lords]. [88008]

Mr. Vaz: The current availability of legal aid for family mediation, contained in Part III of the Family Law Act 1996, will be maintained following the implementation of the Access to Justice Bill. The detailed provisions, including the assessment of the suitability of cases for mediation under section 29 of the Family Law Act, will be contained in the Funding Code, which is being developed by the Legal Aid Board for use by the future Legal Services Commission in assessing applications for public funding. The Bill provides that the criteria set out in the Code shall reflect the principle that, in many family disputes, mediation will be more appropriate than court proceedings. The Board is currently assessing responses to a consultation paper on the Code. Before coming into effect, the Code will be subject to Parliamentary approval through the affirmative procedure. Only organisations with a suitable contract will be able to conduct family mediation sessions for publicly funded clients.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the measures taken by his Department since May 1997 to support family mediation. [88006]

Mr. Vaz: Since May 1997 the provision of publicly funded mediation for family proceedings under Part III of the Family Law Act has been implemented by means of contracts for family mediation services granted by the Legal Aid Board. Funding has been provided to assist national mediation bodies and local mediation services with the development of mediation services to meet the contract requirements in appropriate circumstances. The provisions of Section 29 of the Family Law Act, requiring applicants for legal aid funding for family proceedings to attend a meeting to consider whether mediation might be suitable for their case, have been implemented across England and Wales on a pilot basis and the pilot will be extended later this year.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures his Department intends to take to promote an increased take-up of family mediation. [88007]

Mr. Vaz: The provision of legal aid funding for mediation in family disputes is already available in many areas and will be made available throughout England and Wales. As part of the process of providing publicly funded mediation, funding is being provided for the support and development of mediation services in appropriate circumstances. The provisions of Section 29 of the Family Law Act, requiring applicants for legal aid funding for family proceedings to attend a meeting to consider whether mediation might be suitable for their case, are being implemented in some areas on a pilot basis and will also be implemented throughout England and Wales.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date his Department was first informed that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88797]

Mr. Vaz: The Lord Chancellor was informed on 21 June 1999.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lifelong Learning

12. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how the lifelong-learning initiative announced by the new opportunities fund will benefit local libraries. [87208]

Mr. Chris Smith: The £200 million New Opportunities Fund stream for Community Access to Lifelong Learning will make a substantial contribution towards developing the infrastructure for a Public Libraries IT Network, linking local libraries to each other and to the National Grid for Learning by 2002.

Seaside Resorts

14. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assistance he plans to provide for English seaside resorts. [87210]

Janet Anderson: Seaside resorts represent a very important sector of our domestic holiday market. "Tomorrow's Tourism", our tourism strategy, sets out the action that resorts need to take to adapt to changes in holiday-taking trends. It includes a model eight-stage regeneration plan. The English Tourism Council will work with regional and local authorities to encourage adoption of this model plan and the sharing of best practice by seaside resorts.

Hotels Rating Scheme

15. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what benefit tourists will gain from the new harmonised rating scheme for hotels and guesthouses. [87211]

Janet Anderson: The consistency of ratings made under the new schemes by the AA, RAC and new English Tourism Council will be much easier to understand than the different ratings we have now and will therefore reflect better what tourists want to know. The new ratings place more emphasis on quality and so provide greater incentive for improved standards. There should be a greater incentive also for providers of accommodation to participate in the schemes, thus increasing the proportion of accommodation which is inspected and rated for use by tourists. These and other benefits should quickly begin to be found when the schemes are launched to consumers this September.

BBC Funding

16. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the review of the future funding of the BBC. [87213]

Mr. Chris Smith: I asked Gavyn Davies to report to me on the future funding of the BBC by the end of July. I understand that the panel are on course to do this.

25. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to receive the final recommendations from the BBC funding review panel; and if he will make a statement. [87224]

Mr. Chris Smith: I expect to receive the review panel's conclusions by the end of July. I will then consult publicly on the findings.

Sports Council

17. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what benefits he expects to secure for the public and sporting clubs from the new funding agreements with the Sports Council. [87214]

Mr. Banks: The funding agreements for Sport England and UK Sport provide an explicit and challenging statement of the outputs and levels of performance we expect to be delivered in return for our public investment in sport.

Rugby Grounds

18. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to improve safety and spectator comfort at rugby grounds. [87215]

Mr. Banks: The Government are determined that spectators of all sports should be able to enjoy the action in safety and comfort. In April I announced new roles for both Sport England and the Football Licensing Authority in our drive to modernise sports grounds across the country. Sport England is to fund a £10 million improvement scheme over the next four years to help top rugby league and rugby union teams, and the major cricket counties to improve safety at their grounds. In addition, the Football Licensing Authority will be reconstituted as the Sports Grounds Safety Authority and will have an advisory role on safety issues associated with all sports which use outdoor sports stadiums, including rugby. I am sure my hon. Friend will agree that these are welcome developments.

Tourism

19. Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will ensure that tourism companies and organisations in all parts of the country are consulted on the implementation of the Government's new tourism strategy. [87216]

Janet Anderson: We shall. We are currently engaged in a 10-venue series of events across England both to further publicise our strategy, "Tomorrow's Tourism", and to consult with tourism companies and organisations on its implementation in their own regions.

Green Spaces Initiative

20. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what facilities for children will be provided by the green spaces initiative funded by the New Opportunities Fund. [87217]

Mr. Chris Smith: By 2002 the New Opportunities Fund will have committed £125 million to projects throughout the UK designed to help urban and rural communities improve their environment by creating access to green spaces of educational, recreational, or environmental value to the community.

Many of the wide variety of projects which may be funded under the initiative will be of specific benefit to children. These are likely to include community use of green spaces for play and recreation, or the creation of safe routes to schools.

The New Opportunities Fund is consulting widely on the development of the initiative and plans to invite the first applications by the end of this year.

BBC (Impartiality)

22. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the BBC's obligation to guarantee political impartiality. [87219]

Mr. Chris Smith: Broadcasters are required to treat matters of political controversy and those relating to current public policy with due impartiality. They must aim for accuracy and ensure that, over a reasonable period of time, a proper balance of different points of view is achieved. The Governors of the BBC are well aware of their obligations in this respect.

New Opportunities Fund

23. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what directions he has given to the new opportunities fund about how it should allocate the extra £80 million it has been awarded. [87220]

Mr. Chris Smith: None. The New Opportunities Fund is pursuing six initiatives which will receive funding altogether of £1.5 billion. The revised forecast for Lottery income during the licence period means that money will be available earlier to meet these commitments.

Museums Access (Disabled)

24. Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if proposals to secure access to museums and galleries for disabled people have been included in funding arrangements negotiated with organisations sponsored by his Department. [87223]

Mr. Chris Smith: Yes. All the funding agreements between my Department and the sponsored national museums and galleries include proposals related to promoting access for people with disabilities.

Tobacco Sports Sponsorship

27. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure the removal of tobacco sponsorship from sport. [87226]

Mr. Banks: Draft regulations banning tobacco advertising were published on 17 June 1999. It is our intention, subject to consultation, to bring the general advertising regulations into force on 10 December. Tobacco sponsored sports events will have until 2003, or (in exceptional global cases) 2006, in order to allow them time to secure alternative sponsors.

Millennium Dome

31. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what special arrangements and fares exist for people travelling from north Yorkshire to the Millennium Dome. [87230]

33. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage visitors from the north of England to the Millennium Dome. [87232]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company working with the travel industry, including rail and coach operators, aims to deliver packages combining travel and Dome entry. These will give visitors value for money and encourage all those who wish to visit the Dome to do so. Following the company's announcement of ticket prices on 18 March, the travel industry has already confirmed a range of attractive and competitive packages. For example, National Express has announced return coach travel and entry to the Dome for just £29.99 from anywhere in England, Scotland or Wales. I am sure that the people of North Yorkshire will take advantage of these good value packages.

32. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures his Department is taking to promote the Millennium Dome overseas. [87231]

Mr. Chris Smith: The British Tourist Authority (BTA) is promoting the Millennium Dome overseas as part of its campaign—"Britain: Now is the time". In addition the BTA's website www.visitbritain.com has information on the Dome as well as links to the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC). The Department's website www.culture.gov.uk also contains information on the Dome and links to NMEC's site.

35. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans there are for a religious service or moment on the opening night at the Millennium Dome. [87235]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is discussing the arrangements for the Opening Celebrations at the Dome with a number of interested parties including the Royal Household, the Government and Lambeth Palace. The nature and scope of the Celebrations will be announced in due course.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many temporary and permanent jobs he estimates will be created through the Millennium Dome. [87233]

Janet Anderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, Central (Ms Winterton), today, Official Report column 13.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimates he has made of the numbers likely to visit the millennium exhibition in the first year. [87236]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Experience is planned as a one-year event running from 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The New Millennium Experience Company estimates that it will attract 12 million visitors during the year of operation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the private companies which (a) have made and (b) are to make, financial contributions to the Millennium Dome. [86238]

Janet Anderson: The following businesses and organisations have been announced as sponsors: BAA, Barclays, Boots The Chemists, British Aerospace, British Airways, BSkyB, BT, Camelot, CGU, Coca Cola, Corporation of London, De Beers, Ford, GEC, Kodak, L'Oreal, Manpower, Marks and Spencer, Mars, McDonald's NatWest Group, Premier Brands, Prudential, Reuters, Roche, Tesco, Wall's, Woolwich and 3Com.

In addition, financial support for the Faith zone is being provided by organisations with Christian affiliations (the Laing Family Trusts, the Jerusalem Trust, three other trusts and foundations, and an international company with links to the UK), and from the Vedic tradition (the Hinduja Foundation). Payment of sponsorship moneys depends on the contractual arrangements made with the sponsors. NMEC's Annual Report and Financial Statements 1998–99 will be placed in the House Libraries in due course and will include audited figures for that financial year.

Museums and Galleries (Children's Visits)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many children have visited national museums and galleries since 1 April. [87212]

Mr. Chris Smith: There were over 338,000 visits by children to the national museums and galleries and their branches sponsored by my Department during April and May this year.

Sporting Excellence

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received about promoting sporting excellence in the United Kingdom. [87218]

Mr. Banks: I have regular discussions with representatives from a wide range of organisations with an interest in the development of sporting excellence in this country.

HEALTH

HIV/AIDS

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the cumulative number of people who had been diagnosed HIV positive (a) broken down by probable means of transmission and (b) in total in (i) England and (ii) each region of England, for each year from 1981 to 1998, and for 1999 to date; [84802]

(2) how many people diagnosed with AIDS and not known to have died there were in (a) England and (b) each region of England in each year from 1981 to 1998, and in 1999 to date; [84797]

(3) if he will list the cumulative number of people diagnosed with AIDS in (a) England and (b) each region of England in each year from 1981 to 1998, and in 1999 to date; [84800]

(4) if he will list the cumulative numbers of people with AIDS who died in (a) England and (b) each region of England in each year from 1981 to 1998, and in 1999 to date; [84799]

(5) how many people were newly diagnosed HIV positive (a) broken down by probable means of transmission and (b) in total in (i) England and (ii) each region of England, for each year from 1981 to 1998, and for 1999 to date; [84801]

(6) if he will list the cumulative number of people who had been diagnosed HIV positive and are not known to have died (a) broken down by probable means of transmission and (b) in total in (i) England and (ii) each region of England, for each year from 1981 to 1998, and for 1999 to date; [84803]

(7) how many people with AIDS died in (a) England and (b) each region of England in each year from 1981 to 1998, and in 1999 to date. [84798]

Ms Jowell: The information has now been placed in the Library.

Biomedical Scientists

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he plans to take to return salary levels for biomedical scientists within the NHS in comparison to doctors to the level which obtained in 1984; and if he will make a statement. [86470]

Mr. Denham: The pay of biomedical scientists, who are also called Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers, is negotiated in the Professional and Technical Staffs Whitley Council. The Management Side has made a pay offer for 1999–2000 based on issues specific to these staff, including recruitment and retention, affordability, National Health Service output targets and the economic context. We are also discussing with all NHS unions the proposals to modernise the NHS pay system published in "Agenda for Change" on 15 February 1999.

Standing Conference of Women's Organisations

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings he has had with the Standing Conference of Women's Organisations in the last 12 months; and how many he had in the previous 12 months. [87646]

Ms Jowell: On 16 September 1997, I presented Mimi Johnson, representing the Standing Conference of Women's Organisations, with the Commonwealth Award for Excellence in Women's Health. There have been no other meetings between Ministers and the Standing Conference of Women's Organisations (SCWO) in the past 24 months.

As a member of the Women's National Commission, the Government's official advisory body for women, SCWO has the opportunity to participate in consultation on specific issues requested by Government Departments, and to input their concerns on any other matters.

The Government are particularly grateful to SCWO for their help in publicising and promoting the Listening to Women campaign.

Representatives from the SCWO participated in regional events in Manchester (22 February 1999), Birmingham (26 March 1999), Reading (21 May 1999), and the International Women's Day Meeting in London on 8 March 1999, which were held as part of the Listening to Women consultation exercise. These meetings enabled a wide range of women to speak face to face with Government and were attended by either my noble Friend the Baroness Jay or myself, in our role of Ministers for Women.

Hospital Dispensing

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce measures to ensure the centralised collection of information on medicines dispensed in hospitals. [87857]

Mr. Denham: "Information for Health", published in September 1998, provides the strategic direction for the development of information and Information Technology in the National Health Service to 2005. This charges Local Health Communities with developing Local Implementation Strategies for Information that indicate how the national objectives will be achieved. Part of the Local Implementation Strategy will be to show how all acute trusts will be able to achieve adequate Electronic Patient Record Systems by 2005. This includes the electronic ordering and record of supply of medicines. Providing the necessary piloting work is supportive, information about medicines dispensed in hospitals will then be capable of transmission over the NHSnet to support central analyses, as required.

Nutrition

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of patients who are malnourished on admission to hospital; [87282]

(2) what steps he is taking to improve standards of nutritional knowledge among medical and nursing staff; [87283]

(3) how many hospital trusts have published written nutritional standards; and if he will make a statement. [87284]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 21 June 1999]: Research studies have shown that 40 per cent. of adult patients and 15 per cent. of children are malnourished on admission to hospital. Several important reports about hospital nutrition have been published in the last decade which both educate hospital staff and contribute to development of local nutritional standards. We do not centrally record the various policy documents in many areas of care produced by each National Health Service trust but the Commission for Health Improvement would take hospital nutrition into account in its rolling programme of local service reviews.

Pharmaceutical Products (Parallel Imports)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he expects to announce proposals with regard to parallel imports of pharmaceutical products; [87969]

(2) when he intends to reply to the letter of 7 May from the Association of Pharmaceutical Importers. [87968]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the letter from the Association of Pharmaceutical Importers and we have no current plans to announce proposals with regard to parallel imports of pharmaceutical products.

NHS Staff (Morbidity Rates)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health service staff (a) died and (b) became ill as a result of contracting a disease or picking up an infection while in hospital for each year since 1990. [88123]

Mr. Denham: Under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 there is a statutory obligation on all employers to report illnesses or infections contracted through work to the Health and Safety Executive. The National Health Service Executive does not collect this information separately but seeks to ensure through guidance that employers comply with the legislation, and that all illnesses and infections falling within the categories laid down in the Regulations are reported.

Mental Health Provision

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has collected on the availability of acute service beds for mental health service patients. [88577]

Mr. Hutton: The table sets out the data for the latest year available.

Average daily number of available beds and average daily number of occupied beds, mental illness wards open overnight (i.e. 24 hours), England 1997–98

Ward classification	Available beds	Occupied beds
Children

A and E Provisions (South Shropshire)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will visit South Shropshire to examine the accident and emergency provisions in that area. [88847]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit South Shropshire. I visited Kidderminster Hospital accident and emergency department, which serves South Shropshire, on 28 May, and I met a local councillor from South Shropshire to discuss accident and emergency provision.

National Donor Register

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what mechanism is in place for updating the National Donor Register to include those people who have changed their name to ensure that they remain on the register; [88712]

(2) how many kidneys have been donated, in the last year, as a direct result of the National Donor Register being contacted; [88710]

(3) how many times in the last year the National Donor Register has been contacted by the donor co-ordinators in order to find out if the potential donor is registered; [88709]

(4) if all the donors listed on the National Donor Register are still alive; and what mechanism is used to delete from the National Donor Register those potential donors who have died without donating; [88711]

(5) how many hon. Members are listed on the National Donor Register. [88714]

Mr. Hutton: It is not possible to say how many kidneys have been donated as a direct result of the National Health Service Organ Donor Register being contacted. During 1998, the last full calendar year for which figures are available, 78 kidneys were retrieved from donors whose names were included on the register.

The NHS Organ Donor Register is confidential and it is therefore not possible to say how many hon. Members are registered.

The NHS Organ Donor Register is reliant on registrants providing information when they change name or address. The mechanisms for doing so are the same as those for registering in the first place. These are accessible through vehicle driving licence applications and changes, through the UK Passport Agency on the issue of a new passport, when registering with a general practitioner or by using the leaflets available in libraries, GP surgeries and other public places.

Every effort is made to ensure that the NHS Organ Donor Register is accurate. In order to improve accuracy, links are being established with the Office for National Statistics to cross reference information about deaths. The NHS Organ Donor Register is held alongside the National Transplant Database. The Database cross references with the Register with the aim of ensuring that any donor whose name is recorded on the Register is removed on donation.

It is not possible to say how many times local transplant co-ordinators contact the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority in order to access the Register as this information is not available centrally. There are currently 7.5 million names on the Register with 58,000 applications to be processed. In the vast majority of cases, families of potential donors are content that the donation should go ahead knowing that their relative wished to be an organ donor or had registered with the NHS Organ Donor Register.

NHS Prescriptions (Transparency Directive)

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the criteria to exclude products from NHS prescription which he has notified to the European Commission to comply with Article 7 of Council Directive 89/105 EEC (the Transparency Directive). [88504]

Mr. Dobson: Since 1989 six criteria have been separately notified to the Commission. I have advised the Commission of the full set which currently apply, which are: first, under the Selected List Scheme, medicinal products in seventeen therapeutic categories which are excluded from prescription on the grounds that, on expert advice, they had no clinical or therapeutic advantage over other, cheaper, drugs in the following categories:

- mild to moderate painkillers
- indigestion remedies
- laxatives
- cough and cold remedies
- vitamins
- tonics
- benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers
- antidiarrhoeal drugs
- drugs for allergic disorders
- hypnotics and anxiolytics
- appetite suppressants
- drugs for vaginal and vulval conditions
- contraceptives
- drugs used in anaemia
- topical anti-rheumatics
- drugs acting on the ear and nose
- drugs acting on the skin.

Secondly, products may be considered as "borderline substances" which are not truly medicinal products with clinical or therapeutic value and are excluded from National Health Service prescription on that ground.

Thirdly, as well as being freely available on sale over the counter to the general public, the cost to the NHS if the product(s) were to be supplied on prescription could not be justified at any price likely to be economic to the manufacturer and that the supply of the product is not considered a priority for the use of the limited resources available to the NHS.

Fourthly, that products which none the less may meet a legitimate clinical or therapeutic need when properly prescribed, are subject to misuse by drug misusers, and such misuse, or the manner in which the product is administered by drug misusers, gives rise to the risk of physical or mental morbidity and alternative products are available to meet all legitimate clinical or therapeutic needs.

Fifthly, a medicinal product or a category of medicinal products may be excluded entirely from supply on NHS prescription. It may alternatively be excluded except in specified circumstances, or except in relation to specified conditions or categories of condition, or specified categories of patient. A medicinal product or a category of them may be so excluded where the forecast aggregate cost to the NHS of allowing the product (or category of products) to be supplied on NHS prescription, or to be supplied more widely than the permitted exceptions, could not be justified having regard to all the relevant circumstances including in particular: the Secretary of State's duties pursuant to the NHS Act 1977 and the priorities for the expenditure of NHS resources.

Sixthly, products which comprise an injection device prefilled with a drug may be excluded from supply on NHS prescription if the same drug is available and can be used more economically in a container which may be used in conjunction with a refillable injection device.

London Chest Hospital

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of South Essex Health Authority's contract with London Chest Hospital in relation to heart by-pass operations; and if he will set out the annual number of operations (i) covered by the contract and (ii) performed, for the health authority over the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [88175]

Mr. Denham: The information available is given in the table.

Speech and Language Therapists

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the reasons for the disparity in remuneration between speech and language therapists and other health care professionals of similar qualification. [88625]

Mr. Denham: Basic pay rates for speech and language therapists have increased by between 158 per cent. (minimum) and 170 per cent. (maximum) since 1984, more than those for any other professional staff group in the National Health Service. Qualification is one of many factors influencing decisions on pay. We published proposals to modernise the National Health Service pay system on 15 February 1999. Our aim is a pay system which gives employers effective ways of rewarding people for taking on more responsibility and developing new skills.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive replies to his letters of 6 May (ref. POH(2)5608/22) and 18 May (ref. POH(2)5608/22) regarding constituents. [88618]

Mr. Denham: I replied to both of my hon. Friend's letters on 24 June.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Active Schools Co-ordinators

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what role there will be for the New Deal in the recruitment by Sport England of the new Active Schools co-ordinators. [87221]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Sport England can employ people through the New Deal programme in the same way as any other employer, providing they satisfy the requirements of the programme. We hope that they will do so.

School Visits (Insurance Cover)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice he has circulated to schools in connection with the desirability of insurance cover for (a) residential courses involving at least one night away from home, (b) day visits starting and concluding within school hours and (c) day visits extending beyond normal school hours; and what assessment he has made of difficulties for schools in meeting insurance liabilities in connection with such courses. [88235]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department's 1998 publication, "Health and Safety of Pupils on Education Visits: A Good Practice Guide", strongly advises group leaders to ensure that adequate insurance is in place for all kinds of school visit, no matter when or where the visit is made. It recommends them to clarify with their LEA what insurance already exists and what additional or special cover may be needed, and gives examples. The booklet was produced after an extensive consultation, which did not suggest that schools found it hard to insure visits or meet the costs.

Bett Report

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to respond to the Bett report on higher education remuneration. [88624]

Mr. Mudie: The independent review of higher education pay and conditions was established by the higher education employers: it is for them and the relevant trades unions to respond to the recommendations.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Further Education Funding Council expects to announce firm allocations of finance to further education colleges to promote proposed curriculum changes. [88234]

Mr. Mudie: The Further Education Funding Council intends to consult shortly on its proposals for ensuring that the funding methodology reflects the proposed curriculum changes arising from the Qualifying for Success policies. Decisions on this will be taken by the Council at its December meeting this year, which will then be reflected in the provisional allocations for the 2000–01 academic year, to be issued to colleges in March 2000.

Computer Systems

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from local educational authorities about difficulties in modifying computer systems to reflect changes in the system of student support. [88623]

Mr. Mudie: We have received no representation from local education authorities about difficulties in modifying computer systems.

The upgrades to the computer systems are needed to enable the local education authorities to administer the new Student Support arrangements. The majority of the system upgrades are being handled by three IT suppliers, while 40 local education authorities have in house IT teams.

The new arrangements represent a very big change for all those concerned—LEAs, the Student Loans Company, Higher Education Institutions and students and their families. As with any new system it will take time to bed in. Officials in the Department have engaged all these parties in designing the new system, setting the deadlines and agreeing all other features of the new student loan arrangements. All of us are concerned to ensure that students receive their loans at the start of the term.

We have been informed by the IT suppliers that by mid July the local education authorities would have received all the upgrade required to administer the new Student Support arrangements.

FE Lecturers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received from the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education concerning pay and conditions for further education lecturers; and what reply he has sent. [88236]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met recently with representatives of NATFHE to discuss issues they wished to raise about pay and conditions for further education lecturers. We have received a number of letters from hon. Members enclosing copies of a letter which NATFHE members had been encouraged to send. We have replied to those representations, noting that we are providing very substantial extra funds for further education—£725 million over the next two years. Colleges are responsible for the pay and conditions of their staff. Nevertheless, we take every opportunity to encourage unions and employers to work together to determine a sensible way forward under the improved circumstances we have created.

FE Teaching Staff

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received regarding the pay and conditions of teaching staff in the further education sector; and if he will make a statement. [88063]

Mr. Mudie: Ministers have recently met representatives of the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education, the Sixth Form Colleges Employers Forum, the National Joint Council for Sixth Form Colleges and the Association of Colleges and have discussed issues about the pay and conditions of further education lecturers. We have received a number of letters from hon. Members, enclosing copies of a letter which NATFHE members had been encouraged to send. We have replied to those representations, noting that we are providing very substantial extra funds for further education—£725 million over the next two years. Colleges are responsible for the pay and conditions of their staff. Nevertheless, we take every opportunity to encourage unions and employers to work together to determine a sensible way forward under the improved circumstances we have created.

FE Colleges

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to publish a White Paper on the future of further education colleges and TECs; and if he will make a statement. [88005]

Mr. Mudie: We will be announcing our proposals for post-16 education and training shortly and will make a statement at that time.

Ministerial Meetings (Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on how many occasions Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998 indicating the dates and locations, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials in each case. [87427]

Mr. Mudie: There have been two meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met Michael Martin, the Irish Minister for Education and Science, at a bilateral on education issues in Dublin in October 1998. On the same day he also met Mary Harney, Tanaiste and Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Employment to discuss employment issues. Three DfEE officials accompanied the Secretary of State.

In addition my hon. Friend the Minister for School Standards spoke at an Anglo-Irish International Conference on Information and Communication Technology in Dublin in May 1999. Tom Kit, the Irish Minister for Labour and Trade Consumer Affairs, also spoke at the conference.

Ministers have also met their counterparts at meetings on European Union business.

Booster Classes

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding is made available to schools to fund year 6 booster classes. [87678]

Ms Estelle Morris: Currently, £18 million has been made available for schools to run additional literacy and numeracy classes. We will make an announcement shortly about funding for 1999–2000 and beyond.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, columns 99–100, on post-16 education, when he plans to announce his proposals for post-16 education. [87866]

Mr. Mudie: We plan to announce our proposals for post-16 education and training shortly.

Mobile Cranes

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what public funding is available towards the costs of training drivers of mobile cranes with particular reference to requirements to meet LGV licence conditions; and if he will make a statement. [87900]

Mr. Mudie: Training courses for drivers of mobile cranes are included in Schedule 2(a) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and are therefore eligible for funding from the Further Education Funding Council.

Devon Youth Music Service

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department will take to resolve the outstanding issues concerning Devon County Council's funding for the Devon Youth Music Service. [88009]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government provided, through the Music Standards Fund, funding to Devon Local Education Authority for centrally provided music services. Subsequent arrangements between the LEA and Devon Youth Music are not a matter for the Department for Education and Employment. None the less, officials have been in contact with both the County Council and Devon Youth Music to offer advice.

European Social Funds (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to transfer responsibility for payments and financial management of European social funds to the National Assembly for Wales as part of the regionalisation programme for the European Social Fund; and if he will make a statement. [87995]

Mr. Andrew Smith: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales wrote to me on 23 February 1999 accepting in principle responsibility for these payments and the financial management of the Welsh European Social Fund Programmes from the start of the new period in January 2000.

Education Initiatives (Funding)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the education initiatives launched since May 1997 under which specific grants are allocated (a) through the Standards Fund and (b) by other means, stating in each case and for each financial year the funding provided by central Government. [88170]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table lists the education initiatives launched since May 1997 for which funding is allocated to schools and local education authorities through the Standards Fund and other specific grants showing for each initiative the amount of funding provided by the Government in each financial year. The figures for the Standards Fund do not include Local Education Authorities' contributions. For 1999–2000, the 5.7 per cent. increase in Education Standard Spending Assessment included provision for Authorities' contributions to the Standards Fund.

4. The Books for Schools grant includes provision for grant maintained schools paid via the Funding Agency for Schools.
5. In 1998–99 a large proportion of nursery education funding was channelled through the Revenue Support Grant.

Class Sizes

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children aged five to seven years in (a) Bath and North-East Somerset and (b) South Gloucestershire were in classes of more than 30 pupils in each year from 1992 to date. [88217]

The Government have pledged to reduce infant class sizes so that no 5, 6 or 7-year-old is in an infant class of more than 30 pupils. The number of infants in classes larger than 30 has already been reduced by some 130,000 between January 1998 and January 1999.

Teaching Consultation

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce the results of his consultation on teaching. [88165]

Ms Estelle Morris: An announcement following the consultation exercise on the Green Paper, "Teachers: meeting the challenge of change" will be made shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Faversham and Mid-Kent dated 24 April about the definition of a parent in a ballot on grammar schools. [88196]

Mr. Mudie: A reply has been issued today, Monday 28 June 1999.

TREASURY

Brazil

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's contribution to Brazil's financial rescue package, with particular reference to the impact of the adjustment policies required of the Brazilian Government on Brazilian citizens. [87882]

Ms Hewitt: Financial tensions in Brazil have eased significantly following the IMF-led international financial support package agreed last year, and this has allowed Brazilian interest rates to fall. The UK Government directly contributed $$1\frac{1}{4}$ billion to the financial support package. The UK will continue to play an active role in monitoring Brazil's performance under its IMF programme. Continued adherence under the IMF programme is essential if the recovery in investor confidence is to be maintained.

The IMF programme requires Brazil to narrow its large fiscal deficit. This fiscal adjustment will have a negative impact on growth in the short term but it is necessary if stability is to be restored. Macroeconomic stability is an important precondition for a sustainable economic recovery which will raise living standards and should benefit all sections of society. The Brazilian Government, the IMF and the World Bank have worked together closely to ensure that the impact of the adjustment programme on the poor and vulnerable is minimised. The World Bank have undertaken a number of projects in Brazil with a social dimension.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86990]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment published in November 1998 commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

The Treasury encourages a wide-ranging consultation, in particular through the Pre-Budget consultation process. The Pre-Budget Report sets out the direction of economic policy and outlines measures under consideration in the run-up to the Budget. A range of organisations have submitted responses to the Pre-Budget and other consultations. Some individual groups have published responses to the Pre-Budget Report and Budget 99, including the Women's Budget Group. Treasury Ministers and officials also consult regularly with the Women's Budget Group on a range of issues, through a series of meetings and seminars.

Withholding Tax

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the impact of (i) a 20 per cent. withholding tax (a) with and (b) without, an exemption on interest earnings abroad and (ii) a requirement for the provision of information on capital income to the tax authority of a relevant country, on (A) levels of fraud, (B) money-laundering, (C) reduced bank transparency and (D) the movement of funds to overseas tax havens; and if he will make a statement. [88399]

Dawn Primarolo: We are doing a great deal of detailed work on an assessment of the impact of the draft European Commission Directive on the taxation of interest from savings—in close co-operation with the City of London. We have made it clear that we will not agree to any Directive which damages our financial markets or which would require the United Kingdom to introduce a withholding tax.

The government strongly support international initiatives, through the EU, OECD, the G7 and the Financial Action Task Force on money laundering, to improve the international sharing of information relevant to inquiries into financial crime, tax evasion and avoidance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Personal Data Transfers

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what respect the Safe Harbour proposal on personal data transfers differs from the rules that will apply under the 1995 EC Data Protection Directive. [88107]

Mr. George Howarth: Consistent with the Directive's requirement for "adequate" rather than "equivalent" protection in third countries, the draft "safe harbour" proposals do not reproduce all the Directive's detailed provision. However, they contain the key components of the data protection regime created by the Directive: provision for individuals to be informed; restrictions on the use and disclosure of individuals' data without consent; requirements for data security and data quality; individuals' rights of access and rectification and enforcement arrangements. The proposals are still under discussion.

Trespassers

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1994 and in which police authority areas, section 61 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 has been used; and if he will make a statement. [88093]

Mr. Boateng: The use of powers to direct trespassers to leave land under section 61 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 is an operational matter for the senior officer present at the scene. Records are not maintained centrally on the numbers of occasions on which such powers are used.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to reimburse from central Government the cost to Wiltshire local taxpayers of policing and protecting the Stonehenge World Heritage Area; and if he will make a statement. [88092]

Mr. Boateng: Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, the budget of Wiltshire Police Authority will increase this year by 3.4 per cent. to £68.9 million, which is above the national average increase of 3.1 per cent. Around 80 per cent. of the police authority's spending comes from central Government.

The Government congratulate Wiltshire Constabulary on their handling of the disorder at Stonehenge on 21 June. Police forces can from time to time face particular demands on their resources. We would normally expect forces to meet any additional costs from within their existing budgets, or from contingency reserves.

Passports

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the time-scale for processing passport applications at the Peterborough Passport Office received (a) by post and (b) by special arrangement with Post Office Counters. [88166]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The processing time for passport applications received by the Peterborough Passport Office by post is 33 days and for applications received via Post Office Counters is seven days.

The Passport Agency is currently prioritising applications by customers' declared travel dates, and the processing time for postal work at the Peterborough Passport is for non-urgent applications.

Applications received via Post Office Counters are easier to process, and generally have more urgent travel dates. Non-urgent applications received by partners would not be given priority over urgent postal applications.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements the UK Passport Agency has made with Post Office Counters for fast-tracking the processing of passport applications. [88164]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In view of its current operational problems, the Agency has changed the arrangement with Post Office Counters Ltd., and the Liverpool Office is now dealing with applications from them in 20 working days, and from its five other passport offices in 15 working days.

Due to its current backlog of work, the Agency is prioritising all applications by travel dates and there are delays in some offices in processing non-urgent work received from the Post Office.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of telephone calls from members of the public to each of the Passport Agency's offices which were left unanswered in each of the last 12 months. [88506]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information on the number of calls receiving a courtesy message during the last 12 months is shown in the table. This record represents the nearest equivalent to the number of calls left unanswered. These figures include repeat calls. The Passport Agency cannot at present determine the proportion of repeat calls. These figures are collated centrally and cannot be broken down to an estimate for each office in any accurate way.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the public the Passport Agency has agreed to pay (a) compensation and (b) ex-gratia payments to during the last 12 months; and what is the total sum of money involved. [88513]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency's compensation policy is to reimburse the reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred by customers as a direct consequence of clear operational errors, or failure to provide an acceptable level of service by means of an ex-gratia payment.

Each case is considered carefully on its merits. It is not the Agency's normal policy to make compensation payments for distress and inconvenience arising from such errors and failures. Records of compensation payments are not split into compensation and ex-gratia categories.

The information requested on compensation payments made by the Agency in the last 12 months is shown in the table.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what, in each month from January 1994 to date and in respect of each of the Passport Agency's six offices, was the time taken to process (a) new applications and (b) renewal applications; and if he will make a statement. [88627]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The table shows the average maximum times taken at each of the Passport Agency's offices to process all straightforward, properly completed applications in each month from January 1994. The Passport Agency does not collate this information separately for new and renewal applications and the figures represent the maximum turnaround times for all applications:

The Passport Agency has, for a number of years, had a very good record of delivering services. The average annual maximum processing time on straightforward properly completed applications has been under 10 working days in each of the financial years from 1994–95 to 1997–98.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the revenue which the Passport Agency will forgo in the current financial year as a result of the extension of the period of passport validity free of charge. [88510]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency's estimate of the income forgone as a result of the use of two year exceptional extensions to clear quickly, straightforward renewal applications is £1.08 million, based on an average fee of £18. The income will be recouped in two years.

The cost of processing an exceptional extension is much less than a full 10-year passport. Hence, in terms of matching income and expenditure the loss is much less than £18.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average period of time for determining passport applications in each of the Passport Agency's six offices in each month from January 1996 to date. [88515]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is shown in the table.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed currently (a) in total and (b) broken down by grade at each of the Passport Agency's offices. [88802]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The total number of staff currently employed in the Passport Agency is 1,828. The breakdown by grade is shown in the table:

Grade	Number
Grade 5	2
Grade 6	2
Grade 7	11
Senior Executive Officer	18
Higher Executive Officer	65
Executive Officer	194
Administrative Officer	870
Administrative Assistant	666

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) telephone and (b) written inquiries have been received in each of the Passport Agency's six offices in each of the last 12 months. [88621]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency's published telephone inquiry number is a single non-geographical number (0870 5210410). The inquiry service is fronted by an automated menu system which, depending on the option selected, then routes calls to either an appropriate recorded message (for general inquiries) or an operator (for specific inquiries).

An element of the calls are, therefore, answered centrally by recorded messages, whilst the remainder are transferred to the local office to be answered by an operator. If all lines to the local office are busy, customers receive a courtesy message for that office. To provide the full picture, the number of calls answered centrally by recorded and courtesy messages has also been included.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passport applications in each month since January 1996 have been endorsed with a two year extension; and if he will make a statement. [88505]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency currently has backlogs and in order to clear quickly straightforward renewal applications, certain existing passports are being extended provided certain criteria are fulfilled.

The number of extensions that have been made are as follows:

	Number
May 1999	–18,918
June 1999 (to date)	–19,178
Total	38,096

The only other extensions that have been made by the Passport Agency since January 1996 have been a total of 183 made by the out-of-hours duty officer in the London office to facilitate travel for those requiring an emergency service.

The temporary extension of passports is a sensible easement to reduce queues and assist people to travel. Arrears of passport applications are double the amount last year and have been caused by an exceptional rise in applications since April, additional applications arising from the requirements for children to have separate passports and arrears which accrued following the introduction of a new issuing system which is being piloted in Liverpool and Newport. The criteria to be met before extensions are given are that the holders details remain unchanged, the passport has not expired more than five years previously, the passport is not damaged or altered, the passport is not subject to restrictions, and the applicant's appearance is clearly identifiable.

These extended passports are properly issued passports valid for travel and immigration authorities abroad have been made aware of the position. There is no relaxation in security and proper checks are made before the passports are extended. The measures are temporary and expected to cease by September when current backlogs are expected to be cleared.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the Passport Agency's business plan for 1999–2000. [88512]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Agency is working to a three year Corporate Plan. I expect to receive the Agency's Business Plan for 1999–2000 in the next few weeks, to take account of decisions on the full implementation of the new computerised issuing arrangements.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in providing telephone answering facilities at each of the Passport Agency's offices. [88507]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Agency is currently recruiting additional staff, some of whom could be allocated to the telephone inquiry bureau (TEB) at each local office. In the short term, this could help to improve the service by extending the use of existing telephone equipment.

The Agency has appointed consultants to review all technical and business options and make recommendations for improving the telephone inquiry service. This initiative takes forward an Agency's commitment to improve communications for members of the public. It will include modernising government initiatives and investigate the opportunity to automate progress inquiries using the new computer system.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children's applications for passports have been received at each of the Passport Agency's six offices in each month from January 1996 to date. [88514]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the numbers of applications for passports for children under the age of 16 years is set out in the table:

Risk Assessment

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress and conclusions of his Department's Study on assessing dangerous offender risk in practice. [88520]

Mr. Boateng: A project commenced in November 1998 to examine issues associated with the risk assessment and risk management process with dangerous and sex offenders. The research is assessing consistency of practice between the police and other agencies, as well as identifying good practice. The fieldwork is being undertaken in six police force areas in England and Wales and is due to be completed towards the end of 1999.

A review of the literature in the area of risk assessment and risk management has also been undertaken and is likely to be published by the end of 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress and conclusions of his Department's comparative study of risk assessment scales in use by the Prison Service and Probation Service. [88519]

Mr. George Howarth: The Research, Development and Statistics Directorate of the Home Office has received an interim report of a study conducted by the University of Wales and the Probation Studies Unit, Oxford, on behalf of the Home Office, entitled "Evaluating Risk and Need Assessment in Probation Services". The study examined how the risk scores obtained from the two risk assessment instruments commonly used by probation services compared with actual reconvictions over a 12 month period. The findings so far are provisional but indicate that both tools are able to produce risk measures which are significantly related to subsequent reconviction. We expect to receive the final report at the end of October and to publish it in December.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress and conclusions of his Department's survey of prison and probation officers' experience of risk assessment scales. [88518]

Mr. George Howarth: The Research, Development and Statistics Directorate of the Home Office is working on a draft report entitled, "Risk of Re-offending and Needs Assessments: the user's perspective" which is expected to be published in December alongside other research on risk assessment. It will look at the practical experiences and attitudes of probation officers using risk and needs assessment tools and make recommendations about the structure and use of any new system.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have had (a) visits curtailed and (b) closed visits enforced because of drugs being smuggled during prison visits in the latest period for which figures are available. [88302]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on closed visits enforced because of drug smuggling is not yet available centrally. Information on curtailed visits is not collated centrally.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into a correlation between drug abuse and the level of opportunity for work, training or recreation in prison. [88305]

Mr. George Howarth: No research has been commissioned specifically into the correlation between drug misuse and the level of opportunity for work, training or recreation in prison. However, we have set targets for purposeful activity within prison regimes based on the belief that constructive and structured regimes can contribute towards a reduction in offending of all kinds.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what quantities of what unauthorised drugs were found in HM prisons and young offenders' institutions in each of the last five calendar years. [88301]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the number of seizures of different drugs found in prison establishments is outlined in the table. However, data on quantities of drugs found are not available.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mandatory drug tests on prisoners proved (a) positive and (b) negative in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and in what proportion of positive tests disciplinary action was taken. [88708]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1998, 88,304 mandatory drug tests were undertaken, and some 20,152 of those tests were positive for drugs. This figure includes results from both random and targeted tests. During 1998, a total of 15,672 offences of "unauthorised use of a controlled drug" were punished under the Prison Rules. Not all positive tests lead to disciplinary action for a number of reasons including:

If a prisoner were imprisoned for less than the retention period of the drug that tested positive, no charge could be laid because the misuse could have taken place whilst in the community. The maximum retention time for benzodiazepines and cannabis is 30 days.

Similarly, if a prisoner tested positive twice within a short space of time, they might not be charged on the second occasion because both positive results could have arisen from the same incident of misuse.

A prisoner might be released after being tested but before any charge could be laid.

A few prisons operate a policy of cautioning a prisoner outside an adjudication for a first offence of cannabis misuse.

There will always be a small number of cases where a procedural error, for example failure to charge within 48 hours of the discovery of an offence, means that the case cannot proceed to adjudication.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what dates (a) he first sought legal advice about the status of Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism (Emergency Provisions) Act 1989, (b) he received that legal advice and (c) he advised the police not to rely on those Parts of the Act; [88732]

(2) on what date instructions were given to draft the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revisal of Parts IVA and IVB) Order 1999; and if he will make a statement. [88801]

Mr. Straw: Instructions were given on 21 June 1999 to draft the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (Revival of Parts IVA and IVB) Order 1999.

The Law Officers received a written request from my Department for legal advice about the status of Parts IVA and IVB of the Act, and other related matters, on 1 June. They received Counsel's opinion on 17 June and gave their written advice to my Department on the same day. My officials provided me with detailed advice on 18 June.

Chief Officers were advised on 23 June 1999 that Parts IVA and IVB of the Prevention of Terrorism Act 1989 had not been in force since 22 March 1998 and that they should not, therefore, rely on these provisions. Prior to this, on 28 May, informal advice had been given to the Secretary of the relevant Committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers to the effect that a question mark had arisen about the status of the provisions and that urgent advice was being sought.

Prisoners

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of inmates were locked in their cells for (a) less than 10 hours a day, (b) between 10 and 15 hours a day, (c) between 15 and 20 hours a day and (d) in excess of 20 hours a day in each prison and young offenders' institutions in the most recent period for which figures are available. [88304]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service collects, for each establishment, only the average time that all prisoners spend locked in their cells. The table shows the proportion of the prison population held in prisons where the average time locked in cell in May 1999 was as stated. Data are provisional and subject to validation by prisons. This excludes performance at Portland prison where reliable information for May is not yet available.

Dangerous Personality Disorders

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about his plans for new legal powers to detain people with dangerous personality disorders; and if he will make a statement. [88516]

Mr. Straw: The Government have received a number of informal comments following my statement to the House of Commons on 15 February, Official Report, columns 601–03. We expect to receive more formal comments when the consultation paper setting out our proposals in more detail is issued.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 601–03, when he plans to publish a consultation document on powers for the detention of people with dangerous personality disorders. [88500]

Mr. Straw: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I plan to publish a detailed consultation paper on the management of dangerous people with severe personality disorder shortly.

Sex Offenders Register

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress and conclusions of his Department's evaluation of the Sex Offenders Register. [88517]

Mr. Boateng: The evaluation of the Sex Offender Register began in August 1998. This is examining how the police are in practice administering the registration requirement, and how effective the Act is considered to be. The evaluation will be available towards the end of this year, at which point we will consider its implications for the effective operation of the Act in the future.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of emergency planning requirements in Cumbria. [88352]

Mr. George Howarth: None. The assessment of what is required in Cumbria is the responsibility of the local agencies.

For 1999–2000, Cumbria County Council was allocated a £204,288 grant. The Chief Executive was informed on 26 May that, as a result of the new scheme, this would be reduced to £183,859 for 2000–01 and again to £136,486 for 2001–02.

Civil defence grant has never been provided on the basis of an assessed need for each specific area and is only a contribution towards the total requirement. The new scheme is based on the following rationale:

All 178 grant eligible authorities will receive a basic allocation of £45,000 to ensure a minimum level of service, and the delivery of basic standards of preparedness.

County Councils will receive an allocation of £10,000 for each of the District Councils within the County boundary in recognition of the service that a County must provide to constituent Districts.

Remaining grant after the first two elements have been addressed will be allocated according to Bellwin thresholds. The Bellwin Scheme, operated by the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, sets a level of expenditure above which central Government may contribute to costs incurred by local authorities in responding to a major incident. The use of Bellwin acknowledges the relationship between population size and the work load of emergency planning teams in large areas.

Some work done by local authorities can be charged to outside industry and in Cumbria, for example, the cost of work done with the nuclear industry under specific legislation, can be reclaimed from them.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the future funding for emergency planning services in (a) England and Wales and (b) Cumbria. [88353]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office provides civil defence grant to eligible local authorities in England and Wales to offset some of the expenditure incurred by them in meeting their civil defence duties. The grant is not intended to meet the full cost of emergency planning services.

The total amount of grant for England and Wales has been set at £14.038 million for this year and the next two years. Cumbria have been allocated £204,288 for 1999–2000, £183,859 for 2000–01 and £136,486 for 2001–02. The reduction is the result of a new mechanism for allocating civil defence grant.

Gas Lighter Refills

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make an announcement about the outcome of the consultation exercise seeking views on the proposal to ban the sale of gas lighter refills to people below a certain age. [89020]

Mr. George Howarth: I intend to make an announcement tomorrow morning.

Written Answers to Questions

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fur Trade

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had within the EU on requiring the labelling of fur products to state the country, animal of origin and how the animal has been killed. [87415]

Mr. Wilson: The EU has not discussed requirements for labelling of fur products. However, consumers themselves have a role to play here by requesting information about products before buying. The Trade Descriptions Act 1968 and the Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations prohibit false or misleading information about products. If a trader is unwilling to provide clear information, consumers can exercise their right to shop elsewhere. I have initiated consultation with ministerial colleagues on what further steps might be taken.

Gender and Science Watch System

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on departmental policy in response to the European Commission's proposals under the Gender and Science Watch System. [87679]

Mr. Battle: The Government support the aims of the recent European Commission Communication "Women and science—Mobilising women to enrich scientific research", which includes a description of its activities known as the Gender and Science Watch System. The Commission's approach is consistent with the Government's policies to increase the participation of women in science and complements the initiatives already being taken in the UK, for example The Promoting SET (Science, Engineering and Technology) for Women Unit, located in the Office of Science and Technology at the Department of Trade and Industry.

Landmines Act 1998

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about breaches of the Landmines Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [87885]

Dr. Howells: Anyone with any evidence to suggest that there has been a breach of the Landmines Act 1998 should draw it to the attention of the relevant enforcement authorities, to whom any letters alleging such breaches are passed by this Department.

Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if a company based in the UK needs a licence to export goods covered by the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 to overseas subsidiaries. [87955]

Dr. Howells: Yes.

Intellectual Property

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to increase the ability of UK companies and institutions to protect their intellectual property; and if he will make a statement. [88074]

Dr. Howells: The Government's Competitiveness White Paper, which was published last December, includes a comprehensive and ambitious action plan for improving the legal framework which creates and defines rights, for improving access to intellectual property, and for reforming the civil justice system to allow intellectual property rights to be enforced more easily and cheaply.

In particular, we are pressing for early adoption of a proposal for a European Directive on copyright and the information society. This will introduce changes to the copyright system throughout Europe to ensure that it can deal more effectively with the challenges and opportunities brought by dissemination of copyright works by means of digital networks. Also in the field of information technology, during our presidency of the European Union, the United Kingdom hosted a major international conference on ways to protect computer software, including by patents. As a result of this initiative, we expect the European Commission to bring forward a proposal for a Directive for harmonising the patents regime across member states, and so to encourage innovation in this important area.

In patents, we are pushing for a unitary Community patent providing rights across all member states. This would present further choice for those who wish to protect their innovations by patents in addition to existing routes via the European Patent Office, through which a bundle of individual national patents may be obtained, and the United Kingdom's own patent office which affords rights in the United Kingdom. Such a unitary system must, however, command the confidence of industry, and we are seeking ways to ensure that rights are underpinned by a high degree of legal certainty.

Discussions are currently taking place with our European Community partners on the possibility of harmonising so-called "utility models" (or petty patents). If adopted, a Directive would require the United Kingdom to introduce such a system for the first time, although 12 of our EC partners currently operate such regimes. Utility models are for the protection of smaller, incremental inventions. Rights would be granted by registration without the technical and legal scrutiny which precedes granting of patent rights. Acquisition of rights would, therefore, be quicker and cheaper and would present advantages to industry, especially small businesses. However, this carries risk that rights could be found to be invalid, and that rights could be used anticompetitively. It is important that the terms of an eventual Directive benefits firms, especially small businesses.

Official fees for obtaining patents and trade marks at the United Kingdom Patent Office have been substantially reduced in the last 2 years. Some fees in trade marks and patents have been reduced by 50 per cent. and application fees for patents have been abolished completely—the first intellectual property office in the world to do so. In addition, the Office continues to offer a customer focused service and to grant high quality rights speedily. Trade mark rights are granted within weeks, and patents can be granted within a year of the initial application. Once the impact of the present fees reductions has emerged, we will undertake a review to determine the effects of official fees on the innovation process.

Access to, and cost of litigation in, the intellectual property field is soon to benefit from changes recommended in Lord Woolf's recent report. New Rules on litigation before the Patent Office should be in force this year and benefits will accrue from more general changes to civil actions.

The Patent Office is also closely involved with the European Patent Office and the World Intellectual Property Organisation in the establishment and implementation of a global system for introducing e-commerce into the filing and prosecution of applications for intellectual property rights. It is expected that technical standards for this field will be agreed internationally next year and a full system should be implemented by 2005.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many rural post offices there were in Scotland, Wales and England (a) at the latest available date, (b) in 1997, (c) in 1989 and (d) in 1979. [88080]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 24 June 1999]: The Post Office have advised the numbers of rural post offices in Scotland, Wales and England as follows:

	Scotland	Wales	England
End May 1999	1,140	987	6,272
End March 1998	1,170	983	6,535

I understand that, prior to March 1998, Post Office Counters Ltd. did not break down the numbers of post offices by country but only by its own administrative regions.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the monitoring period for the assessment of the national minimum wage, as it affects activity holidays, will end. [88451]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Low Pay Commission has been asked to monitor and evaluate the introduction and impact of the National Minimum Wage and to report to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by December 1999. I understand that the Commission will shortly be writing to interested parties, including groups representing activity holiday companies, inviting them to submit written evidence by mid-September.

Share Purchases

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what responses he has received to the consultation document, Investment Companies Share Repurchases Using Capital Profits; and when he expects to announce his conclusions; [R] [88610]

(2) if he will make a statement on investment company share purchases using capital profits; [R] [88612]

(3) what plans he has to table regulations on the issue of investment company share repurchases using capital profits. [R] [88611]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 28 June 1999]: My Department received 42 responses to its consultative document Investment Companies—Share Repurchases Using Capital Profits. Two respondents opposed a change to the law. A summary of responses was issued last week and has been placed in the Library of the House along with the original consultative document. Following the receipt of a number of detailed comments on the draft Statutory Instrument, my Department proposes to undertake a further, limited, consultation on a slightly revised draft SI (but not on the principle of a proposed change to the law) and an announcement will be made as soon as possible thereafter.

Science Investment

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Government are investing in science; and if the information is publicly available. [89293]

Mr. Battle: My noble Friend Lord Sainsbury is today publishing the Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology which sets out the Government's spending plans. We see science as a major priority and a key driver for wealth creation, employment and an improved quality of life both in this country and overseas. We will be investing over £20 billion in this area over the next three years—a real terms increase of £1.8 billion—representing a level of investment higher in real terms than at any time over this decade. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

City Flyer Express BA Merger

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the reasons for the time taken to reach his decision on the merger of City Flyer Express and British Airways; and when that decision is scheduled. [88887]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will publish the Competition Commission's report on British Airways' proposed acquisition of City Flyer Express as soon as is practicable. It is not the practice of my right hon. Friend to comment publicly on the timing or substance of competition cases in advance of publication of the Competition Commission's report.

SOCIAL SECURITY

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88481]

Angela Eagle: The Social Questions Working Group of the Council met on nine occasions in the last 12 months when officials from this Department were present.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is able to announce changes to the regulations in respect of the payment of Jobseeker's Allowance to employees made redundant when their employer goes into receivership. [89031]

Angela Eagle: We are aware of the effect of the Jobseeker's Allowance rules in this area and are considering the matter in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry to see whether any changes can be made. There are, however, complex issues to be resolved. Meanwhile, there are existing safeguards to protect those most in need as payments can be made if hardship would otherwise result.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made on the consultation on the stakeholder pensions proposals. [89295]

Mr. Timms: The consultation paper "Stakeholder Pensions: Employer Access—the Government's Proposals" is published today. This is the second in a series of consultation papers on stakeholder pensions; further consultation papers will be issued in the coming weeks.

This paper demonstrates our commitment to move ahead with pensions reform. Stakeholder pensions will plug a gap in pension provision by providing low-cost, dependable and flexible pensions for up to five million people who currently do not have the right options available to save for their retirement.

This consultation paper sets out how employers will play a part in this process, by providing employees with access to a stakeholder pension scheme if they do not offer an occupational pension scheme. Copies of the consultation paper are available in the Library and the Vote Office.

Transport and Works Act 1992

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992 will be affected by the transfer of powers to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July. [87582]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No outstanding Transport and Works Act applications will transfer to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July.

GM Crops (Cleethorpes)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the locations in the Cleethorpes parliamentary constituency where GM crops are being grown. [87991]

Mr. Meacher: Within the parliamentary constituency of Cleethorpes, six consents have been issued in respect of small research trials of genetically modified crops to permit growing in 1999. These trials are all located at Dalby Farms Limited, Brigsley. Further details of these trials are available on the DETR public register and on the DETR website.

GM Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the distance of the pollen barrier at the genetically modified farm-scale trial in Wiltshire; what is the distance which SCIMAC recommend for an isolation distance in their code of practice; and if he will make a statement. [88158]

Mr. Meacher: The consent for the farm scale evaluation of spring oil seed rape at Lushill Farm, Hannington, Wiltshire does not specify a pollen barrier. Under the conditions of the release, a 50m isolation distance must be maintained between the genetically modified (GM) oil seed rape and any non-GM oilseed rape to be used for food or animal feed. Any oil seed rape growing within 50m of the GM oil seed rape will in this instance be destroyed after harvest. The 50m separation distance between GM and non-GM oil seed rape is specified in the SCIMAC (Supply Chain Initiative for Modified Agricultural Crops) Guidelines.

Inland Fisheries (Cormorants)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the Environment Agency has made of the damage caused by cormorants to inland fishing. [88194]

Mr. Meale: In 1995 my Department, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Environment Agency commissioned a three year programme of research on the problem of fish-eating birds, including cormorants, at inland fisheries. The research was aimed at identifying the populations, distributions and movements of these birds, their feeding ecology, the extent of the problems they can cause and assessing different management techniques to reduce those problems. The final results will be disseminated to the fishing and bird conservation interests at a seminar to be held on 30 September.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will name those authorities in receipt of the area cost adjustment and the additional SSA which they received for 1999–2000. [88188]

Mr. Meale: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Wind Farms

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of planning applications for wind farms which have been refused; how many appeals against such refusals have been made and in each case on what grounds. [88394]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on planning applications made to local planning authorities for wind farm proposals is not held centrally; there have been 27 planning appeals in England since 1990. In most of those appeals weighing visual impact against the benefits of renewable energy is likely to have been an important consideration. Appeal decision letters are available from the Planning Inspectorate.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 11, on sites of special scientific interest, when he expects to announce how the Government intend to proceed. [88336]

Mr. Meale: We have recognised the need to give thorough consideration to the most effective measures we can introduce, and will be announcing our conclusions shortly.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the (a) level of pollution and (b) threat of pollution arising from spillages from oil storage tanks with insecure stop-cocks; and if he will make a statement. [88195]

Mr. Meale: In 1998 the Environment Agency recorded 5,308 water pollution incidents in England and Wales related to oil spillages. In a sample study six per cent. of incidents were identified by the Agency as due to faulty oil tank valves.

The Government are considering whether further measures to prevent water pollution from industrial, commercial and institutional (residential and non-residential) oil storage installations are needed. We expect to make an announcement shortly.

London Underground

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies have been carried out into the practical effects of the closure of the London Underground Northern Line between Moorgate and Kennington stations from 3 July until 6 September. [88427]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground (LU) have made a number of studies into the practical effects of the upcoming Northern Line closure between Moorgate and Kennington stations. They have modelled the impact on passenger flows across London's public transport system and also modelled in more detail passenger movements in the stations most likely to suffer increased congestion.

Based on the results of these studies and their experience of the southbound closure of the same section of line in 1996, LU have developed an alternative service to minimise passenger disruption for the period of the closure.

Planning Policy (Sport and Recreation)

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the revision of PPG17; and when he expects the revised Guidance to be announced. [88776]

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the revised Policy Planning Guidance Note 17 on Sport and Recreation. [88458]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Liz Blackman) on 13 January 1999, Official Report, column 215. The text is being prepared for consultation in the Autumn.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) by what percentage emissions of carbon dioxide were reduced between the years 1990 and 1993; and what were the major contributors to this reduction; [88739]

(2) by what percentage emissions of carbon dioxide were reduced between the years 1993 and 1997; and what were the major contributors to this reduction. [88740]

Mr. Meale: Emissions of carbon dioxide fell by 4 per cent. between 1990 and 1993 (from 168 MtC to 161 MtC) and by 4 per cent. between 1993 and 1997 (from 161 MtC to 155 MtC). A major contribution to the decline during both periods was the switch from coal to gas and to nuclear for power generation. During the latter period (1993 to 1997) the effects of energy efficiency improvements, economic restructuring and the increases in road transport fuel duty in reducing emissions were also significant. Without these trends emissions would have been expected to rise between 1990 and 1997 due to the effects of economic growth.

Playing Fields

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of including playing fields in the land use register. [88459]

Mr. Raynsford: It is our intention that the National Land Use Database will record all land uses, including playing fields.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many school playing fields have been given planning permission for non-sport development since 1 October 1998. [88742]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not available. The results of planning applications and appeals are not classified by current or previous land use.

Rail Services (Shrewsbury)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Virgin and Central Train companies regarding improvements to rail services through Shrewsbury; and if he will make a statement. [88455]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for the train operating companies. OPRAF holds regular meetings with both Virgin and Central Trains and although enhancement of services through Shrewsbury have been discussed, I understand that neither company has any current plans for improvement.

Residential Leasehold Properties

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the reports which he has requested from the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales about disciplinary action taken by that body in respect of non-compliance with the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 in relation to the accounts of residential leasehold properties in each of the last three years. [88578]

Mr. Raynsford: We have not requested any such reports. However, officials have met representatives of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales to discuss the certification of service charge accounts. We are well aware of leaseholders' concerns in this area and are considering what might be done to protect their money more effectively.

Cumberland Gap (M6)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce a decision on the funding of the Cumberland Gap section of the M6 in Cumbria. [88350]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Following the Roads Review last year we announced that we would not be taking forward the M6 extension scheme between Carlisle and Guardsmill as it was then designed but that the Highways Agency would be tasked with considering lower cost options to upgrade the A74 to motorway standard. Cumbria CC has since been commissioned to carry out the study into lower cost options. Decisions on the timing and finance of the scheme will be made following receipt of the study report which is expected in August.

Railway Stations (Bicycles)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of railway stations have secure parking provision for bicycles. [88956]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Figures for the percentage of stations with secure parking provision for bicycles are not held centrally. However, around 40 per cent. of railway stations do provide provision for the storage of bicycles.

Monsanto

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the trips, facilities, gifts and other offerings of a financial value provided by Monsanto to (a) Ministers and (b) civil servants in his Department since 1 May 1997. [88954]

Mr. Meale: As far as I am aware, since 1 May 1997 no Minister or civil servant working in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, its Agencies and its staff working in the Government Offices has accepted any trips, facilities, gifts or other offering provided by Monsanto.

Large Dams

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 70, on rivers, when he expects to receive Dr. Kader Asmal's report on large dams. [87390]

Mr. Meale: We understand that Dr. Kader Asmal has been asked to report by the end of June 2000.

Transport Planners

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 568, on transport planners, what was the result of the proceedings of the Steering Group. [87391]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Steering Group, which is drawn from transport providers, passenger groups and local authorities, is continuing to work with the consultants appointed by the Department to assist in the development of the gender audit and the production of a checklist to help transport providers better understand and meet women's transport requirements. We will be finalising the checklist over the summer.

Fish Farms

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the organisations and individuals consulted during the consultation to re-band fish farms within water discharge levies. [88414]

Mr. Meale: A change in the charge band for fish farms was one of a number of amendments made to the Environment Agency's Charging for Discharges Scheme with effect from 1 April 1999. The Environment Agency consulted 211 organisations and individuals on the full range of its proposals. Those consulted included the following with an interest in fish farms:

Association of Still Water Game Fishery Managers
Atlantic Salmon Trust
British Trout Association
Cerne Valley Fisheries Ltd.
Clean Rivers Trust
Commercial Coarse Fisheries Association
Council for the Protection of Rural England
Country Landowners Association
Federation of Small Businesses: Agricultural Affairs Committee

Salmon and Trout Association
Shellfish Association of Great Britain
UK Association of Fish Meal Manufacturers
Water UK
Welsh Anglers Association

Public-private Partnerships

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if, in the context of Public-Private Partnership arrangements, a future private sector partner for National Air Traffic Services will be given a right to review and amend the operational mission of the new Scottish centre project; [88948]

(2) what role a future private sector partner for NATS would have for MOD air traffic control operations under the Government's Public Private-Partnership proposals. [88952]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government issued a consultation document in October 1998 seeking views on our preferred proposal of a PPP for NATS. The period for responses to that consultation has now closed and we are considering those received including the views expressed on the new [illegible] centre and the relationship with MOD. We will make a detailed announcement on the way forward in due course.

Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the new Scottish air traffic control centre will only be built as part of the proposed public private partnership for a national air traffic centre. [88947]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are fully committed to a new air traffic control centre at Prestwick which is part of NATS' two centre strategy for providing ATC services in the 21 century. It is currently envisaged that the project will be taken forward as part of the PPP for NATS.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the operational mission currently planned for the new Scottish air traffic control centre comprises (a) en route services, (b) oceanic services and (c) contingency services for the new en route centre at Swanwick. [88949]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The contract currently under negotiation with Sky Solutions for the New air traffic control centre at Prestwick (NSC) will include the provision of en route and contingency services. The Oceanic flight data processing system is being procured under a separate PFI contract and will be housed in the NSC building.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee how purchasers of food products on sale within the Parliamentary Estate which may contain genetically modified ingredients are informed that these ingredients may be present. [88633]

Mr. Dennis Turner: The Food Labelling (Amendment) Regulations 1999 provide catering establishments with a transition period of six months in order to achieve full compliance. The Refreshment Department is working towards this, and expects to be in a position to inform its customers of food products containing Genetically Modified soya or maize protein or DNA by the required deadline of 19 September 1999.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Jury Trial

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 14 June 1999, Official Report, columns 53–54, on jury trial, if he will place in the Library a summary of the responses received during the consultation exercise concerning the proposal to remove the defendant's ability to elect for Crown Court trial in either way cases; and if he will make a statement. [88333]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford), on 19 May 1999, Official Report, columns 373–74, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. A copy of the summary of responses to the consultation exercise will shortly be placed in the Library.

Crime and Disorder Audits

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he (a) has given and (b) plans to give to local partnerships to ensure consistency in the questions asked by local authorities and police forces for the purpose of audits under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [88317]

Mr. Boateng: Previous Home Office guidance to partnerships did not prescribe a specific format for the audits, although it has advised that they specifically seek out levels of racial crime and domestic violence. There are no current plans to amend this guidance.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 May 1999, Official Report, column 467, on crime and disorder audits, if he will list those partnerships that have made road safety a priority issue. [88316]

Mr. Boateng: We have not yet completed an analysis of the audits and strategies produced by the local crime and disorder partnerships. The Home Office will carry out a programme of research into the strategies, to inform Home Office guidance to partnerships, but we currently have no plans to publish a full list of priorities so far identified by partnerships.

Road Casualty Reduction

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority he gives to road casualty reduction within the strategic objectives he has set for the Police Service. [88314]

Mr. Boateng: The overarching aims and objectives for the police service, which were published last year, include the reduction of casualties. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made it clear in his letter to Chief Officers of Police and their Police Authorities that he saw traffic policing as central to the police's responsibility for maintaining law and order and reducing crime and that he expected road policing to play a full part in achieving safer communities.

Jill Dando

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the police inquiry into the murder of Jill Dando. [88405]

Kate Hoey: The investigation of crime within the Metropolitan Police District is an operational matter for the Commissioner.

The Commissioner tells me that the murder of Jill Dando has triggered an enormous public response: the police have received over 6,000 calls, letters and fax messages. The inquiry has raised over 4,000 individual investigative actions; nearly 700 statements have been taken; and there has been a mass trawl of Closed Circuit Television records from private industry, local authorities and the Highways Agency to help track events in Jill Dando's last hours. Following the first phase of gathering, filtering and interpreting the initial information the investigation is now focusing upon developing, examining and testing hypotheses based upon what is now known. The investigation is itself subject to a progress review, in line with new general policy; the Commissioner informs me that the investigating team is following a number of lines of inquiry.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dogs are currently used in the Prison Service for the purpose of detecting drugs in prison; where they are located; how many prisons do not have full-time and exclusive access to such a dog; and what the costs are of training and keeping such a dog. [88307]

Mr. George Howarth: There are 240 drug dogs in Prison Service establishments, comprising 51 passive drug dogs and 189 active drug dogs. The list shows the location of the drug dogs.

Forty prisons do not have full-time access to a drug dog, but there are two area search teams (one based at Maidstone prison comprising six dogs; the other at Swinfen Hall Young Offenders Institution with two dogs) and the National Dog Support Group (comprising 14 dogs) which are available to give support to these prisons.

The costs for training and maintaining the dogs are:

Initial Training passive dog: £3,321

Initial Training active dog: £3,000

Annual refresher: £1,000.

The yearly costs of keeping a dog averages £2,088, depending on veterinary care.

Hepatitis C (Prisons)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to institute random or compulsory testing for hepatitis C in prison. [88674]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no plans at present to introduce random or compulsory testing for hepatitis C in prison.

Personality Disorders

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of his plans for new legal powers for the detention of people with dangerous personality disorders with the European Convention on Human Rights. [88626]

Mr. Straw: The Government fully recognise the need for the arrangements for the detention and management of dangerous severely personality-disordered people to be compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights. This need has been taken into consideration in the work which has been done so far. There will be a process of consultation before final decisions are taken about the precise legal framework and about the facilities within which people will be detained. As the hon. Member is aware, section 19 of the Human Rights Act 1998 requires the Minister in charge of a Bill to make a statement before second reading of the Bill as to the compatibility of the provisions with the Convention rights.

Civil Defence Grants

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the new distribution mechanism for civil defence grants. [88840]

Mr. George Howarth: The sole avenue of consultation on this issue has been the Local Government Association (LGA). In recognition that the issues excites strong views, exceptional approval was given for a joint Home Office/LGA Working Group to examine the issues surrounding grant redistribution. The Group met twice and, although a consensus was not reached, there were areas of agreement and Home Office adjusted its proposals following this consultation.

Since work began on the new distribution mechanism, written representations have been received from many different types of local authority affected by proposed changes. Some of this has been Ministerial but correspondence has been dealt with by officials.

The outcome of the new mechanism was announced to Chief Executives in a letter dated 26 May.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in respect of each local authority in England and Wales (a) the amount paid in civil defence grant in 1999–2000, (b) the provisional maximum allocation of civil defence grant for 2000–01 and (c) the provisional maximum allocation of civil defence grant for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [88881]

Mr. George Howarth: The completion of the local government reorganisation process has provided an opportunity to reassess the distribution of civil defence grant to local authorities in England and Wales, and consultation has taken place between Home Office and the Local Government Association (LGA). An announcement about the new mechanism was made to Chief Executives in a letter of 26 May.

As the information required is lengthy, tables have been placed in the Library. Copies of these tables were sent to the LGA and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE) at the time of the announcement.

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the relative increases between 1997 and 1998 on the number of warrants issued by the (i) Secretary of State for the Home Department and (ii) the Secretary of State for Scotland under the Interception of Communications Act 1985; [88720]

(2) what reasons underlie the increase in warrants allowing interception of telecommunications issued by him in 1998 under the Interception of Communications Act 1985. [88719]

Mr. Straw: In his annual report for 1998, the Interception Commissioner records that the substantial increase in interception is due to the continuing incidence of large-scale crime and the greater interception facilities available to meet it. He was satisfied that the strict statutory criteria continued to be applied.

He further recorded that the police and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, assisted in some cases by the security and intelligence agencies, have had many outstanding successes; and that interception of communications remains an effective and an essential operation in the interests of national security and of safeguarding the economic well being of the United Kingdom, and in the prevention and detection of serious crime. Examples of the value of interception in the fight against serious crime are given in the consultation paper on interception of communications which I published on 22 June.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many warrants issued under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 and in force on 31 December 1998 had as their justification (i) the prevention or detection of serious crime, (ii) the interests of national security and (iii) the safeguarding of the economic well-being of the UK; and how many warrants were issued which did not cite one of the above three reasons as its justification; [88718]

(2) how many warrants have been (a) applied for and (b) granted under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, where the justification given was to safeguard the economic well-being of the United Kingdom and where the intended target was a UK citizen or citizens. [88721]

Mr. Straw: The Annual Report of the Commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, published on 17 June, records the number of interception warrants issued annually by the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland. Paragraph 29 of the Report gives the reasons for not providing further information concerning the purpose for which warrants were issued. I consider that it remains in the public interest to follow the established practice and not to provide any more detailed breakdown of the figures in the Commissioner's Report. No warrant may be, or has been, issued unless it is considered necessary to do so in the interests of national security; for the purpose of preventing or detecting serious crime or for the purpose of safeguarding the economic well-being of the United Kingdom.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the volume was of incoming telephone calls from the 0990 service to each office of the UK Passport Agency in each month since May 1997. [88878]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of incoming telephone calls transferred from the 0990 service to each office in the UK Passport Agency in each month since May 1997 is shown in the table.

In addition to these calls transferred from the 0870–0990 service, each Regional Office receives calls from an alternative number, which is given out by recorded courtesy messages and high street partners.

Number of effective calls transferred to each regional office TEB by 0990 service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the UK Passport Agency's business plan 1999–2000 and corporate plan 1999–02. [88880]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will place a copy of the UK Passport Agency's 1999–2000 Business Plan and 1999–02 Corporate Plan in the Library of the House once it has been approved, which I hope will be in the next few weeks.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in respect of each office of the UK Passport Agency the volume of incoming telephone calls for each week since 1 January and the percentage of such calls which were answered within 60 seconds. [88877]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency's published telephone inquiry number is a single non-geographical number (0870 5210410). The inquiry service is fronted by an automated menu system which, depending on the option selected, then routes calls to either an appropriate recorded message (for general inquiries) or an operator (for specific inquiries). Details of the volume of incoming calls are listed in the following table.

It can be seen from the table that an element of the calls are answered centrally by recorded messages, while the remainder are transferred to the local office to be answered by an operator. The percentage of calls answered within 60 seconds by an operator is detailed in the following table. Gaps in the table occur when information is not currently accessible.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken by the UK Passport Agency to send a substantive reply to correspondence from members of the public in each month in 1999 and for the most recent date for which information is available. [88884]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency works to a target of 10 working days for replying to correspondence. Performance against this target is measured in terms of the percentage of replies sent within 10 working days and figures for the average time taken to reply are not available. The percentage of correspondence replied to within 10 working days in each month in 1999 is as set out in the table.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress and conclusions of the 1999 review of the agency status of the UK Passport Agency. [88879]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The 1999 review of the Agency Status of the UK Passport Agency was triggered last May and is expected to deliver its recommendations early next year.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time taken by the UK Passport Agency to acknowledge correspondence about complex cases was in each month of 1999 and for the latest date for which information is available. [88876]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency normally acknowledges correspondence about complex cases within five working days. These are cases where there are complex issues and it is not possible to send a substantive reply within the ten working day target for dealing with correspondence. Figures are not available for the average time taken to send acknowledgements. However, in most complex cases, the five working day target is being met.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of personal callers were seen within (a) 60 minutes and (b) 45 minutes at each office of the Passport Agency in each month since May 1997. [88883]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested on the proportion of personal callers seen within (a) 60 minutes and (b) 45 minutes in each month since May 1997 are set out in the following tables.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if performance-related pay forms part of the remuneration of the Chief Executive of the UK Passport Agency; and if he will make a statement. [88886]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Remuneration for the Chief Executive is linked to the Senior Civil Service pay arrangements and no separate bonus is payable.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken by the UK Passport Agency to send a formal response to complaints in each month in 1999 and at the most recent date for which information is available. [88885]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency monitors its performance on responding to complaints on a quarterly basis, in terms of the percentage of complaints receiving a formal response within ten working days. Monthly statistics are not available. In the last quarter (January—March 1999), the UK Passport Agency sent a formal response to complaints within ten working days in 93 per cent. of cases.

Passport Office, Liverpool

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, column 151, on the Passport Office, Liverpool, what compensation will be paid to applicants for passports who have incurred costs as a result of delays in the issuing arrangements. [88426]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency's compensation policy is to reimburse the reasonable out of pocket expenses incurred by customers as a direct consequence of clear operational errors, or failure to provide an acceptable level of service by means of an ex-gratia payment. Each case is considered carefully on its merits and this policy will apply to any claims received relating to delays in issuing a passport. It is not the Agency's normal policy to make compensation payments for distress and inconvenience arising from such errors and failures.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his further letter of 2 June regarding a constituent (ref: 7519/99). [89030]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will reply shortly, but can say that Sukhwinder Kaur was given indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom on 13 June.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Plutonium Transfers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at which European Council Ministerial meeting the European Commission Memorandum of Understanding covering the transfer of plutonium processed in the European Union from Belgium to Japan was discussed and endorsed; what debate on the Commission proposal took place; and if a parallel memorandum covering transfer of United Kingdom plutonium to Japan has been considered by the European Council. [88014]

Mr. Hoon: There is no European Commission Memorandum of Understanding covering the transfer of plutonium processed in the European Union from Belgium or the United Kingdom to Japan.

The Japanese-owned plutonium which is due to be returned to Japan following its recovery from spent fuel reprocessed in France has been fabricated into mixed-oxide (MOX) fuel in Belgium under the terms of a diplomatic exchange of notes between Japan and the European Commission dated 10 February 1997. The exchange of notes was carried out in accordance with Article 101 paragraph 3 of the Euratom Treaty and the European Council were informed.

The Japanese-owned plutonium to be returned to Japan following its recovery from spent fuel reprocessed in the United Kingdom has been fabricated into MOX fuel under the terms of the bilateral agreement on nuclear co-operation between the United Kingdom and Japan which was renewed in October 1998. The European Commission was informed of the renewal of this agreement.

Kosovo

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place summaries of notes received from the Government of the Russian Federation about NATO's action in Kosovo during the course of the conflict in the Library. [88331]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Communications from the Russian government received during this period were sent and received in confidence. They are therefore covered by exemption 1 (c) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current proposals presented to the United Nations relating to Iraq from (i) the UK, (ii) France and (iii) other nations; and what response Iraq has made to each. [88326]

Mr. Hoon: The UK has tabled a comprehensive draft Security Council resolution on Iraq which would put the disarmament process back on track, is generous in its humanitarian provisions and would engage the Council more closely on Kuwaiti issues, including the 600 detainees. It would also give Iraq a clear path to the suspension and eventual lifting of sanctions. Our draft resolution is co-sponsored by the Netherlands, Argentina, Brazil, and Slovenia. Russia and France have also circulated draft resolutions. Iraq has thus far shown no inclination to accept any of the draft resolution being discussed.

Lithuania

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the proposed cultural representation in Lithuania of (a) France and (b) Germany; and if he will make a statement. [88324]

Mr. Hoon: The French Cultural Centre in Vilnius has twenty-four members of staff, fifteen of whom are employed as French language teachers. The Goethe Institute employs six members of staff. We understand there are proposals to begin German language teaching.

The deployment of British Council personnel in the Baltic States is kept constantly under review, in the light of British cultural diplomacy objectives.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the British Council on their proposed representation in Lithuania; how many staff, of what grades, will be deployed and at what annual cost; and if he will make a statement. [88325]

Mr. Hoon: The British Council office in Vilnius was opened in 1992. There are seven staff, six of whom are Lithuanian nationals. Under the British Council grading system one is at grade 7, three at grade 9 and three at grade 10. The British Council Director and Deputy Director in the Baltic States, based in Riga, have overall responsibility for Lithuania and visit Vilnius regularly. The annual cost of the British Council's office in Vilnius, including the library, seminar and examination facilities, is £205,000.

FCO officials are in regular contact with the British Council over their representation in the Baltic States, including Lithuania.

East Timor

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards voter registration in East Timor in preparation for the referendum on 8 August. [88321]

Mr. Hoon: The Chief Electoral Officer of UNAMET has arrived in East Timor and a public information campaign has been launched in preparation of the UK organised consultation. Voter registration will begin once UNAMET is fully deployed. The date of the ballot has been put back by two weeks.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations Security Council on violence in East Timor. [88319]

Mr. Hoon: We have played an active role at the United Nations Security Council, piloting two Security Council Resolutions (1236 and 1246) on East Timor. These Resolutions take note of recent violence in East Timor and commit the Indonesian Government to maintaining peace and security in the territory.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning intimidation and displacement of the population in East Timor. [88320]

Mr. Hoon: We have received reports that militia groups in East Timor have carried out acts of violence against civilians and continue to exercise an intimidatory influence in some parts of the territory. Since the arrival of UNAMET personnel in Dili and Baucau, the security situation in those towns has improved dramatically. We expect the security situation in the rest of East Timor to improve once UNAMET is fully deployed.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) others about the security situation in East Timor. [88341]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: We have recently received a large number of letters from non-governmental organisations, parliamentarians and members of the public making representations about the security situation in East Timor.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights situation in East Timor. [88345]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: We remain concerned at the human rights situation in East Timor. We have repeatedly urged the leadership of the Indonesian Armed Forces to disarm and curb the activities of the militias responsible for much of the recent violence in the territory. We have also called on all sides to show utmost restraint.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Her Majesty's Government have made to the UN Assistance Mission to East Timor; and if he will make a statement. [88357]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: We have despatched seven British police officers with UN Bosnia experience to East Timor. They arrived on 21 June and formed part of the first contingent of the Civilian Police component of UNAMET. We are also planning to send two Military Liaison Officers to the territory. Our contribution to UNAMET is in addition to our US$1 million contribution to the United Nations Trust Fund for East Timor.

Somalia

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's position regarding the current situation in Somalia. [88591]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom supports the efforts of the Inter Governmental Authority on Development and the Standing Committee on Somalia to bring an inclusive, negotiated settlement to the civil war in Somalia.

But the main responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and for restoring peace rests with the Somali people themselves. A serious demonstration is now required by faction leaders and tribal elders of their commitment to the reconciliation process.

MOX Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) of 22 June 1999, Official Report, column 928, what the basis was for the Minister of State's statement that it would require a complex and highly specialised piece of equipment, plant and skills to separate plutonium from MOX fuel. [88654]

Mr. Hoon: The Minister of State's statement was based on the advice of the Government's technical experts in the UK Safeguards Office.

Immigration Cases (DNA Testing)

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of immigration cases required the production of DNA tests to prove family relationships in each of the last three years. [88220]

Mr. Hoon: DNA testing is used only in determining settlement applications. The statistics requested are as follows:

Year	Settlement cases	DNA tests commissioned	Percentage
1996	40,524	2,078	5.1
1998	53,483	32,310	6.0

Details of the number of tests commissioned by individual posts can be obtained from the summary of entry clearance statistics, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. The 1998 statistics are being printed and are scheduled to be placed in the House Library within the next two weeks.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the violation of ceasefire in February in Twic County, southern Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [88344]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: We received a number of reports from NGOs of raiders making attacks in Twic County in February. These were taken up within the framework of Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS).

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of Sudan's treatment of (a) Christians, (b) Animists and (c) Muslims in relation to the UN Commission on Human Rights' Resolution 1999/5 on Sudan. [88342]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The UN Commission on Human Rights resolution on Sudan this year expressed its deep concern at the continuing serious violations of human rights, fundamental freedoms and relevant provisions of international humanitarian law perpetrated by all parties to the conflict.

This was an EU sponsored consensus resolution. It has our full support.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations concerning the National Islamic Front's bombing of southern Sudan during Christian festivals. [88412]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The EU sponsored consensus resolution at this year's United Nations Commission on Human Rights calls upon the Government of Sudan to stop immediately the indiscriminate aerial bombardment of civilian targets.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government, in consultation with its IGAD partners, intends to monitor ceasefire declarations in Sudan. [88343]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 28 June 1999]: While there continues to be a limited ceasefire in Bahr el Ghazal, we continue to call for a comprehensive ceasefire throughout Sudan. The monitoring of such a ceasefire will need to be agreed within the context of the IGAD talks, the next round of which we hope to see start in Nairobi on 19 July.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

East European Partnerships

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the work of East European Partnerships in Russia. [88013]

Clare Short: We currently provide substantial support for Voluntary Service Overseas (VSO), part of which is used to fund VSO's East European Partnership programme. The programme in Russia responds to requests for volunteers from a variety of different sectors. At any one time there can be between 15 to 20 volunteers, mainly working with public authorities and supporting the health and social welfare sectors in the Urals area, with some support for the development of children's shelters in the Moscow area.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Churches and Monuments (VAT)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of exempting churches and national monuments from the requirement to pay VAT on restoration work. [88791]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recognises that VAT on repairs to churches and historic buildings is an unwelcome additional cost to the careful conservation of such buildings. There is no zero-rate available under EC law. Current European legislation permits the introduction of reduced rates of VAT only for goods and services specified in Annex H to the Sixth VAT Directive. Repairs to historic buildings and churches do not feature in Annex H and so the Government legally cannot introduce a reduced rate.

Sports Cabinet

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will add representatives from the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Employment to the Sports Cabinet. [88498]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Sports Cabinet, which I chair, brings together the Sports Ministers of the four parts of the United Kingdom and others who are closely involved in the development of sport at an elite level and the achievement of excellence. It provides for a collective political discussion of the most strategic priorities for UK sport.

To assist us in the consideration of policy, the Sports Cabinet will also from time to time draw on a pool of independent figures to provide expert advice on particular issues. This could include non-executive members of the UK Sports Council, prominent sports representatives and also Ministers or officials from affected Government departments.

The Ministers with responsibilities which affect sport in England also keep in close touch, and will continue to do so.

SCOTLAND

Kosovo

9. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the impact of the conflict in Kosovo on public services in Scotland. [87522]

Mr. Macdonald: Local authorities and the NHS have provided a range of services to meet the needs of the Kosovan refugees who have come to Scotland for care as part of the Evacuation Programme. Local authorities and the voluntary sector are being reimbursed for additional costs incurred. The Scottish Refugee Council and the local authorities involved are to be congratulated for the splendid way in which they are handling this difficult situation.

Draft Concordats

11. Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had concerning draft concordats between United Kingdom Departments and the Scottish Parliament. [87524]

Dr. Reid: The UK Government intend proposing a range of concordats. These will guide working relations between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive.

Further and Higher Education

12. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to increase access to Further and Higher Education. [87525]

Dr. Reid: In Further Education, an extra £100 million over the next three years will enable 40,000 more students from under-represented groups to participate.

In Higher Education, we have earmarked £60 million for widening access to disadvantaged students. Low income and disabled people will be helped to study part-time.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Traffic Congestion (Aberdeen)

13. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate possible solutions to traffic congestion problems in the Aberdeen area. [87526]

Mr. Macdonald: Traffic management in the Aberdeen area is primarily the responsibility of Aberdeen City and Aberdeenshire Councils. I fully expect that they will address congestion problems in their interim Local Transport Strategies, which are due to be submitted to the Scottish Executive next month.

We provided in March a further £4 million from the Public Transport Fund for park and ride and bus priority measures on the A956 and A96.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Elections

14. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up an inquiry to investigate the conduct of the Scottish parliamentary and local government elections. [87527]

Dr. Reid: My officials will be undertaking a review of the general conduct of the elections with returning officers and others. I am aware of some specific problems on 6 May which are already under investigation by the appropriate authorities and are being acted upon. I do not at the moment see any need for further investigation. From 1 July, conduct of local government elections will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Air Links (Heathrow)

15. Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of Scottish air links with Heathrow. [87528]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government recognise the need for good air links between Scottish airports and London airports, and we shall press the case for maintaining access for regional services in any revision of the EU regime. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport recently met a delegation from the Highlands to discuss their wish for an Inverness/Heathrow service. The Government are giving this further consideration.

Departmental Running Costs

16. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the running costs of his Department after 1 July. [87529]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 412, about amending running costs provision for 1999–2000. I have been reviewing the functions of my Department after 1 July and I will make a further statement in due course.

Rail Services

17. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures the Government are taking to improve the quality of rail services in Scotland. [87530]

Mr. Macdonald: This financial year the Government will pay £206 million to secure train services in Scotland. ScotRail, the provider of almost all domestic services in Scotland, is the best performing mainland company in Great Britain.

Under devolution, Scottish Ministers will assume responsibility for funding the ScotRail franchise together with the authority to give the Franchising Director directions on the type of services expected from the company.

Hospital Waiting Lists

18. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to reduce hospital waiting lists; and if he will make a statement. [87531]

28. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland are waiting for hospital treatment; and if he will make a statement. [87542]

Mr. Macdonald: On 31 March 1999, the number of people waiting for in-patient or day-case treatment was 70,227. This is a reduction of 10.6 per cent. on the previous quarter and is the largest quarterly fall in the waiting list for a decade. Hospital waiting lists have been cut by almost 22 per cent. in the past year, and the NHS in Scotland met the Government's target of reducing the waiting list to below 75,000 three years ahead of schedule.

From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

University Funding

19. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish universities to discuss their funding. [87532]

Dr. Reid: I have not met representatives of Scottish universities to discuss their funding. From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament and it would be more appropriate for Scottish Ministers to do so.

Ministerial Responsibilities

20. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement outlining the issues on which he will answer questions in the House after 1 July. [87533]

Dr. Reid: The Procedure Committee's Fourth Report has made a number of recommendations on the range and details of the questions to be put to UK Ministers and on the consequential reformulation of the rules about Questions which are being considered by the Government. I will make a statement on this matter as soon as I am able to do so.

Small Businesses

22. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the economic prospects for small businesses in Scotland. [87536]

Dr. Reid: The Government are laying the foundations for high and stable levels of growth. Interest rates are at their lowest level for 22 years, inflation is low, and the public finances are under control. Combined with cuts in the small business tax rate to 20 per cent., and a new 10p starting rate of tax for the smallest firms from April 2000, the economic prospects for small businesses are very encouraging.

Capital Investment (Schools)

23. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on capital investment in schools in Scotland. [87537]

Dr. Reid: I expect local authorities to increase capital investment in schools as a consequence of additional capital resources from the New Deal for Schools, the Comprehensive Spending Review, and school Public/Private Partnership projects.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Community Schools (Glasgow)

24. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for community schools in Glasgow. [87538]

Dr. Reid: Lochend Secondary School in Easterhouse, Glasgow, was one of seven development projects funded in the 1998–99 financial year to illustrate practical aspects of the New Community Schools model. In March, we approved 37 pilot projects across Scotland, including Lochend. Each pilot project will operate for three years.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Defence Expenditure

25. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of UK defence expenditure on the Scottish economy. [87539]

Dr. Reid: On the basis of the most recent figures available, defence expenditure in Scotland at approximately £1.9 billion supports, directly and indirectly, some 55,000 jobs. Clearly, defence expenditure is both substantial and important to the Scottish economy.

Holyrood (Completion Costs)

26. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the estimated costs of the completion of the new Scottish Parliament building at Holyrood in Edinburgh. [87540]

Dr. Reid: Legal and financial responsibility for the new Scottish Parliament building at Holyrood transferred from Scottish Office Ministers to the Scottish Parliament Corporate Body on 1 June 1999. The hon. Member can obtain information on the Holyrood Project from the Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament at the following address:

The Presiding Officer

Parliament Headquarters
Edinburgh
EH99 1SP.

Economic Development (Borders)

27. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further plans he has to promote economic development in the Scottish borders. [87541]

Dr. Reid: The Scottish Office has been keeping in close touch with the Borders Economic Development Forum to support the implementation of the "New Ways" economic strategy.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Drug Misuse

29. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is being taken to curb drug misuse in Scotland. [87543]

Mr. Macdonald: In March the Government enhanced Scotland's drugs strategy with the publication of "Tackling Drugs in Scotland: Action in Partnership". This document put in place a comprehensive action plan for tackling drug misuse in Scotland within a new framework for co-operation across agencies and communities.

From 1 July, the Scottish Parliament and Executive will have to hand the steps in "Tackling Drugs in Scotland" as they continue the task of reducing drug misuse in Scotland.

Criminal Law

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the division of Government responsibility relating to criminal matters between his Department and the Scottish Executive after 1 July. [87617]

Dr. Reid: From 1 July, Scottish criminal law, procedure and evidence will be matters for the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Ministers, with the exception of matters which are reserved under Schedule 5 to the Scotland Act 1998 or are otherwise outwith the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament under section 29 of the Act. The Lord Advocate will continue to have responsibility for decisions relating to the institution of criminal proceedings in Scotland and for the systems of criminal prosecution and the investigation of deaths in Scotland.

Appeals System

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received relating to the system for appeals to the House of Lords from Scottish courts; and if he will make a statement. [87555]

Dr. Reid: I have received no representations with regard to the system for appeals to the House of Lords from Scottish courts. The Government have no present intention to change any of the arrangements for such appeals.

This is a devolved matter.

Beef on the Bone

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers the Scottish Parliament will have to lift the beef on the bone ban in Scotland. [87535]

Mr. Macdonald: This is a devolved matter. From 1 July 1999, the Scottish Parliament will have full powers in this area.

Mr. Paul Murphy: As an Executive Agency within the Department of Finance and Personnel, the Government Purchasing Agency provides a professional procurement service to all six Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Office and an increasing number of other public sector bodies.

The following key performance targets were set for the Agency in 1999–2000:

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the work to date of the Defence Diversification Agency. [88666]

Mr. Spellar: Following the publication of the White Paper, "Getting the Most out of Defence Technology" (Cmd 4088) in November last year, the Defence Diversification Agency (DDA) started work in January. The DDA, which is part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, is working closely with other central and local government initiatives to improve access to defence-related technology and knowledge. The aim in particular is to provide means of access for small and medium-sized companies in the civil manufacturing sector. I opened the first Regional Office, manned by a Technical Diversification Manager, in Farnborough, at the beginning of April. A second is now open in Rosyth, and we expect two more to open in Malvern and Haslar, Gosport by the end of July. The DDA has already handled over 50 inquiries, from which nine projects have so far been developed. Discussions are underway with the aim of establishing other regional offices in the North West, Northern Ireland, South West, Wales and the North East. The DDA has also established Science Parks at Farnborough, Malvern, Porton Down and Gosport, which already have more than fifteen tenants.

Service Personnel (Hospital Treatment)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the criteria and rules governing priority for the secondary treatment of service personnel at his Department's hospital units at (a) Peterborough, (b) Frimley Park and (c) Derryford. [88425]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Following detailed discussions with the NHS during 1997 and 1998, the principles of a new Service Level Agreement have been developed to form a revised contract from 1999–2000 at the three existing MDHUs at Peterborough, Frimley Park and Derryford, and at the new MDHU Northallerton. This model will also form the basis of all future MOD contracts relationships with the NHS for providing treatment for Service patients and the hosting of Service clinical personnel. It contains the following.

Outpatients—50 per cent. of new referrals to be seen within four weeks and 90 per cent. within 13 weeks.

Inpatients—80 per cent. of patients requiring treatment to be seen within 3 months of the decision to treat.

The contract allows for a price premium to be paid if these targets are met. Where there is a pressing requirement to deploy Service personnel operationally, the single Service primary care authorities identify those patients who would benefit from rapid opinion and treatment in conjunction with the MDHUs. An assessment would then need to be made on whether a change or intensification of treatment would return them to duty faster.

RN Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the contract or service level agreement between RN Hospital, Haslar and the local NHS trust for the provision of district hospital services. [88423]

Mr. Doug Henderson: A Service Level Agreement exists between the Royal Hospital Haslar and the Portsmouth South East Hampshire Health Authority. A copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of Annington Homes to discuss service accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [88363]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 June 1999]: I had a meeting with Sir Thomas Macpherson, the Chairman of Annington Homes (Ltd) (AHL) and Colin James the then Chief Executive of the Defence Housing Executive (DHE), on 29 July 1997. Additionally, DHE staff from the Purchaser Interface Unit meet formally with AHL representatives quarterly for Joint Working Boards (the last meeting was 8 June 1999) and bi-annually for Joint Executive Boards (the last meeting was 31 March 1999). Informal contact takes place on a daily basis.

Compensation Claims

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has paid in each of the past five years in respect of compensation claims for injuries incurred during (a) military service and (b) non-military service; and if he will make a statement. [88366]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The following amount of common law compensation was paid to members of HM Forces in each of the past five financial years for injuries sustained during service:

Year	£
1995–96	12,132,450
1996–97	14,523,261
1998–99	26,675,952

Information regarding the types of activity that members of HM Forces were engaged in when they suffered injury for which my Department subsequently paid compensation can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Road Freight

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the armed forces road freight distribution systems. [89291]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In March of this year, I agreed, subject to consultation with the Trades Unions and other interested parties, a proposal to rationalise the current single-Service road Freight Distribution Systems. The consultation process has now been completed and has raised no concerns that would change the decision to rationalise. I have, therefore, given my final approval to proceed with the rationalisation process.

This change will result in the formation of a new Defence Freight Distribution Group, whose headquarters will be located in Portsmouth, and which will operate under the new Defence Transport and Movements Agency. Rationalisation and integration of the current single-Service systems should bring savings of nearly one million pounds a year.

Overall, the rationalisation process will result in a net reduction of some 15 civilian and 2 military posts. Every effort will be made to identify new opportunities for those staff concerned.

The new organisation will form on 1 July, with full rationalisation by the end of August, once associated work to harmonise current single-Service consignment IT tracking systems has been completed.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what dates Special Advisers from his Department have travelled abroad on official business since 2 May 1997; which countries were visited on each occasion; and what were the names of the Special Advisers who travelled on each occasion. [86291]

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeals

34. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what forecast he has made of the average time taken to hear immigration appeals in (a) 2000 and (b) 2001. [87549]

Mr. Vaz: The IAA aim to maintain the current waiting times of six weeks to an initial hearing and a further six weeks to the substantive hearing, throughout 2000 and 2001, assuming that the number of cases does not go beyond the numbers forecast by the Home Office.

Office for the Supervision of Solicitors

35. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce measures to reform the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors. [87551]

Mr. Vaz: I announced to the House on 22 June 1999, Official Report, column 1018, during Report stage of the Access to Justice Bill, the Government's plans to take powers to establish an office of Legal Services Complaints Commissioner. The Commissioner will have powers to intervene to improve standards of complaints handling by the legal professional bodies. However, we do not propose to appoint a Commissioner, and thereby bring these powers into force, unless and until a professional body is clearly failing to make substantial progress in improving its complaints record.

I am pleased that the Law Society Council approved in principle the recommendations of the Ernst and Young report on the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors at their meeting on 23 June. I believe this is a step in the right direction. I hope the Law Society will be able to put their house in order.

State Apartments (Visits)

36. Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent representations the Lord Chancellor has received about visits to his State Apartments. [87552]

Mr. Vaz: Since 1 January 1999, the Lord Chancellor's Office has received 46 letters requesting visits to the Residence, and 14 requests to use the Residence for a fund-raising reception. The office estimates that there have been about 200 telephone calls inquiring about visits to the Residence. 28 letters have been received thanking the Lord Chancellor for the use of the River Room for charitable receptions, which have so far raised over £1.7 million.

Judicial Appointments

37. Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress he is making with his policy of ensuring that membership of the judiciary is representative of society as a whole. [87553]

Mr. Vaz: The Lord Chancellor appoints or recommends for appointment on merit those candidates who satisfy the qualifications laid down by Statute and who, in his opinion, best meet the criteria for appointment. Without prejudice to this overriding principle, and in accordance with his commitment to equality of opportunity, the Lord Chancellor would like to see more women and ethnic minority practitioners appointed to the judiciary and has introduced a number of measures to encourage applications from members of those groups, including more flexible part-time sitting arrangements and a work-shadowing scheme.

39. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to reform the method for appointment of judges. [87558]

Mr. Vaz: The Lord Chancellor keeps the arrangements for appointing judges under review. He has taken a number of steps to improve the openness, flexibility and effectiveness of the judicial appointments process. At the level of circuit judge and below, the Lord Chancellor has arranged for judicial and lay members to be involved in the selection of candidates for interview, as well as in the interviews themselves; he requires assessments of candidates to be specifically related to the criteria for appointment; he has introduced greater flexibility into the sittings arrangements for part-time judicial appointments; and he has recently introduced a scheme under which practitioners interested in applying for judicial appointment may apply to "shadow" a serving judge. He has ended the system under which appointments were made to the High Court Bench by invitation only: vacancies are now advertised and candidates may apply for appointment. All but the most senior judicial appointments are now made through a process of open and advertised competition. The Lord Chancellor will nevertheless continue to consider the scope for further improvements to the judicial appointments process.

Small Claims Courts

38. Mr. Flight: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements he is making to publicise the transitional arrangements regarding the new procedures for small claims courts; and if he will make a statement. [87554]

Mr. Vaz: Transitional arrangements were covered in Part 51 of the Civil Procedure Rules, published on 29 January. The Civil Justice Reforms introduced on 26 April changed the way in which small claims are now handled. Defended claims are now allocated to one of three tracks; the small claims, the fast or the multi-track. All tracks were treated in the same way in terms of publicity, as they are the foundation of the new, unified civil justice system.

The Court Service took steps to inform its customers of these changes. Posters were placed in court buildings in March; information slips were sent out with every piece of outgoing mail; and people attending the court personally to issue summonses were informed of the changes. Copies of "A Court User's Guide to the Civil Justice Reforms" were available in all courts and information was also available on the Lord Chancellor's Department's website. Some local papers published an article about the reforms by the Lord Chancellor.

Legally-aided Family Mediation

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if legally-aided family mediation will be available under the provisions of the Family Law Act 1996. [88186]

Mr. Vaz: Public funding for family mediation is provided under Part III of the Family Law Act 1996, which came into force in May 1997. The provisions of Part III of the Act are being implemented by means of contracts for family mediation services granted by the Legal Aid Board. A total of 140 mediation services throughout England and Wales have already been awarded contracts and a further 110 contracts will be awarded by the end of July 1999.

Family Law Act 1996

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what his Department's timetable is for implementing the remaining provisions of the Family Law Act 1996. [88185]

Mr. Vaz: I refer my hon. Friend to my written Parliamentary answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Dr. Stoate) on 17 June 1999, Official Report, column 213. No decision about implementation of Part II has been made.

Section 60 permits the making of Rules of Court to allow third parties to apply for orders under Part IV of the Act on behalf of victims of domestic violence. Detailed consultation will be needed to assess the practicality and resource implications of implementing this section of the Act. No timetable has yet been fixed for this process.

Section 64 enables the Lord Chancellor to make Regulations providing for the separate representation of children in proceedings in England and Wales under Part II, and in certain other proceedings. No decision has yet been made as to whether this should be implemented.

Basingstoke Magistrates Court

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received about the temporary arrangements for the Basingstoke Magistrates Court; and how long he expects these arrangements to be in place. [87550]

Mr. Vaz: I have received 5 representations. Basingstoke Magistrates Court will remain temporarily closed until the building works to the adjacent police station are completed in May 2000. I must stress this closure is a temporary measure only.

Legal Aid

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the number of people in each of the next five years who will be ineligible for legal aid who were previously eligible. [87557]

Mr. Vaz: The financial eligibility limits are increased each year in line with other welfare benefits. While there are no formal estimates for future years, we expect that eligibility for civil legal aid will remain at or near its present level. Nothing in the Access to Justice Bill itself will change the position on financial eligibility. However, the Government intend to consult on a number of possible changes to the financial criteria. One of these would be to increase the number of people eligible for advice and assistance, to bring it back into line with that for representation in litigation.

Legal Services Ombudsman

Mr. Casale: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Legal Services Ombudsman intends to publish her eighth annual report. [89292]

Mr. Vaz: The Legal Services Ombudsman has today published her eighth Annual Report, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Community Legal Service

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, when he expects the community legal service to be fully operational. [87546]

Mr. Vaz: The Community Legal Service (CLS) will be established under the provisions of the Access to Justice Bill, which is still before Parliament. Our aim is that Community Legal Services will be available to the great bulk of the population of England and Wales by the beginning of 2002.

As the first step, Pioneer and Associate Pioneer partnerships are being established, as described in the Consultation Paper published on 25 May. These will be operational by the end of 1999 and will cover nearly a quarter of the population of England and Wales. In addition, as the Consultation Paper describes, the Lord Chancellor's Department aims to establish by the end of 1999 core quality criteria for accrediting advice centres to the CLS, and to launch a CLS website on the internet early in 2000.

Subsequent establishment of further partnerships will depend on assessment of the needs of, and advice delivery systems for, each area in which partnerships will operate. It will also need to take account of experience with Pioneers and Associate Pioneers. Progress will therefore depend on actions by many prospective partners, as well as by the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Legal Services Commission.

TREASURY

EU Expenditure

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Communities budget lines frozen following the ECJ ruling of 12 May 1998 (C-106/96); and if he will make a statement on the planned unblocking of these. [86729]

Ms Hewitt: Following the ECJ ruling of 12 May 1998, the Commission suspended a number of budget lines which lacked, or were thought to lack, a legal basis for expenditure on the activities to which they related. Efforts were made to free up certain lines—for example, action against illegal and harmful content on the Internet—quickly, in order that the appropriations entered on these lines in the 1998 budget could continue to be accessed.

Legal bases for a number of other budget lines, or parts of other budget lines, have now been identified by the Commission and funding for these activities has now resumed under a proper legal basis.

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons the climate change levy exemption is proposed for fuel consumed within the chemical reaction rather than fuel burned to initiate the reaction within chemical industry processes. [88069]

Ms Hewitt: The exemption for non-energy use of fuels is based on the broad principle, recommended by Lord Marshall in his report on "Economic instruments and the business use of energy", that processes which do not give rise to emissions of greenhouse gases should not be subject to climate change levy.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue which would be generated by charging of the climate change levy on the fuel burned to initiate reactions within chemical industry processes. [88103]

Ms Hewitt: It is not possible to estimate revenue derived from individual sectors until the final shape of the tax and the rates have been established.

Currency Speculation Tax

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual (a) worldwide and (b) UK revenues, assuming international agreement, from a tax on international currency speculation set at (i) 0.1 per cent., (ii) 0.25 per cent. and (iii) 0.5 per cent. [88226]

Ms Hewitt: The requested information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of allowing voluntary sports clubs to become eligible for charity status. [88580]

Dawn Primarolo: Under charity law, most sports clubs are not eligible for charitable status. The cost of extending the charity tax reliefs and exemptions to all sports clubs would depend on the nature of the clubs concerned, but could be substantial.

VAT

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of reducing to 5 per cent. the requirement to pay VAT on restoration work for churches and national monuments. [88581]

Dawn Primarolo: There is insufficient data to provide the requested estimate.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to the European Commission with regard to the six-month time limit on claiming VAT in other member states. [88916]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have made representations to the European Commission about the time limit for claiming back VAT in other member states on two occasions. On both occasions we drew attention to cases where a member state was in breach of the six-month time limit by which tax authorities must either refund the VAT claimed or give the reason for refusal.

Health Spending

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will increase the funding allocated to the Department of Health under the Comprehensive Spending Review; and if he will make a statement. [88727]

Mr. Milburn: The Comprehensive Spending Review provided the biggest ever cash increase for the Department of Health, providing an extra £21 billion to the NHS in the UK as part of firm three-year plans. The spending plans for years beyond 2001–02 will be considered in next year's spending review.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish the most recent figures showing the number of deaths where the cause of death was recorded as hypothermia in each of the regions covered by the new regional development agencies in the age ranges (i) 0 to 8, (ii) 18 to 24, (iii) 25 to 50, (iv) 50 to 65, (v) 65 to 85 and (vi) 85 years and over; [88652]

(2) if he will publish the most recent population figures of the regions to be covered by each of the new regional development agencies in the age ranges: (i) 0 to 8, (ii) 18 to 24, (iii) 25 to 50, (iv) 50 to 65, (v) 65 to 85 and (vi) 85 years and over; and what proportion of the population in each age range are (a) male, (b) female, and (c) of ethnic minority origin; [88646]

(3) if he will publish the most recent figures showing what proportion of the population of each of the regions to be covered by each of the regional development agencies live in households of only one person in the age ranges (i) 0 to 18, (ii) 18 to 24, (iii) 25 to 50, (iv) 50 to 65, (v) 65 to 85 and (vi) 85 years and over. [88647]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Eddie O'Hara, dated June 1999:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent questions concerning single occupancy households, death from hypothermia and population figures for the new regional development agency areas. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

The estimated percentages of the population in each age group who were living in a one-person private household in 1998 are given in the table below. The percentages have been estimated from the Labour Force Survey, a sample survey covering about 60,000 private households in the United Kingdom per quarter. The estimated percentages are therefore subject to sampling variability.

Information on ethnicity has recently been published in an article in Population Trends no. 96 (Summer 1999) under the title "The Ethnic Minority Populations of Great Britain—the latest estimates" by Jeremy Schuman. Table 3(b) gives the area of residence by ethnic group for Great Britain, and this is broken down into Government Office Regions which have the same boundaries as the new Regional Development Agencies. Table 4(a) gives the age profile within each ethnic group as a percentage of the ethnic group, and Table 4(b) gives profile by ethnic group within each age group as a percentage of the age group. The text of the article gives information about the concentrations of particular ethnic groups within different regions.

Breast Cancer

Ms Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the incidence of breast cancer by age breakdown and (b) the numbers of deaths from breast cancer among women in England for the latest year for which figures are available. [88658]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Fox to Ms Linda Perham, dated 29 June 1999:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your parliamentary question concerning the incidence of and deaths from breast cancer.

The number of newly diagnosed cases of female breast cancer (coded to International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision [ICD9] 174) in England in 1994, the latest year for which data are available, appeared in a Parliamentary answer on 17 May (Hansard 90, column 281).

Influenza

Liz Blackman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of deaths resulting from last winter's influenza epidemic. [88771]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Fox to Liz Blackman, dated 29 June 1999:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on the number of deaths resulting from last winter's influenza epidemic. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

Between December 1998 and March 1999, the provisional number of deaths where the underlying cause of death was certified as due to influenza, using the International Classification of Diseases, was 529.

Rented Residential Accommodation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the value of tax receipts from corporation tax on privately rented residential accommodation in the last year for which statistics are available. [88818]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that some £2¼ billion in corporation tax liability arose in 1996–1997 on companies' income from land and property. A separate estimate for rented residential accommodation is not available.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the value of tax receipts from income tax on privately rented residential accommodation in the last year for which statistics are available. [88817]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that about £900 million of income tax paid by individuals in respect of the 1997–1998 tax year arose from income from land and property. It is not known how much of this arose from residential accommodation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis statistics are compiled by his Department on the revenue raised in the case of (a) privately rented residential property and (b) privately rented commercial property. [88815]

Dawn Primarolo: Statistics on the income of companies and individuals from land and property, and the corporation tax and income tax arising from this income, are based on analyses of representative samples of tax returns. As these returns do not show a split of rent income by type of property, separate statistics on the tax revenue from privately rented residential and commercial property are not available.

No statistics are available on capital gains tax, inheritance tax or stamp duties arising on rented property.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the value of tax receipts from capital gains tax on privately rented residential accommodation in the last year for which statistics are available. [88816]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available.

Rent-a-room Scheme

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of the rent-a-room scheme for each year since the introduction of the scheme. [88820]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that the annual value of the rent-a-room relief is of the order of £20 million.

No more precise estimates are available.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will undertake a pilot survey in three different tax districts including West Cumbria into the actual cost to the Exchequer in terms of lost revenue arising from the rent-a-room scheme. [88821]

Dawn Primarolo: Most of the Inland Revenue's information on people's incomes and tax affairs arrives via tax returns, to which access for analysis is already available on a sample basis. Little extra information is held by tax districts. Nor do tax districts have any means of knowing which people not completing tax returns are likely to be taking advantage of the relief.

Labour-intensive Services

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received with regard to the European Commission's proposal for reduced rates of VAT on labour-intensive services not subject to cross border competition. [88914]

Dawn Primarolo: We have received a number of representations suggesting services to which a reduced VAT rate might be applied in the UK under the proposed measure.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to the European Commission with regard to the Commission's proposal for reduced rates of VAT on labour-intensive services not subject to cross border competition; and if he will make a statement. [88915]

Dawn Primarolo: The UK has made no representations to the European Commission about this proposal.

Company Cars

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 55, how many company cars travelled (i) less than 10,000, (ii) between 10,000 and 13,000, (iii) between 13,001 and 16,000, (iv) between 16,001 and 18,500, (v) between 18,501 and 19,000, (vi) between 19,001 and 20,000, (vii) between 20,001 and 23,000, (viii) between 23,001 and 30,000 and (ix) more than 30,000 miles in the last year for which figures are available. [88789]

Ms Hewitt: The only available information on the total mileage of company cars is the National Travel Survey, but this does not have a large enough sample size to provide the detail requested. The available estimates, which cover company cars available for private use, are shown in the table.

Total annual mileage	Number of company cars
Less than 10,000	175,000
10,000 to 13,999	250,000
14,000 to 18,499	250,000
18,500 to 29,999	475,000
30,000 or more	450,000

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many company cars for the latest year for which figures are available, were of engine size (a) under 1000cc, (b) between 1000 and 1299cc., (c) between 1300 and 1499cc, (d) between 1500 and 1799cc, (e) between 1800 and 1999cc, (f) between 2000 and 2199cc, (g) between 2200 and 2499cc and (h) 2500cc and over. [88716]

Ms Hewitt: The best source of information on the engine size of company cars is the National Travel Survey, which covers only company cars available for private use. However, the size of the Survey allows for only a limited breakdown by engine size. According to the latest Survey, there were about 400,000 company cars with engine capacities up to 1600cc, and about 1,200,000 with larger engine sizes.

EU Contribution

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons he is not yet able to publish the gross and net contributions made by the UK to the EC in 1998; and if he will make a statement summarising the arrangements for recording payments made and payments received from the EU within the Treasury. [88944]

Mr. Milburn: We expect to be able to do so very shortly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88480]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the last year, officials from the Department of Education and Employment have represented the UK at 12 meetings of the EC Education Committee and at 12 meetings of the Youth Working Group. DfEE officials have also attended one meeting of the Social Questions Working Group as observers. The UK is represented on Social Questions Working Group by officials of the UK Permanent Representation to the European Union.

Teachers (Canadian Qualification)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons teachers who qualified in Canada receive lower pay than equivalent teachers who qualified in the United Kingdom. [88728]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers who qualified in Canada do not automatically have qualified teacher status (QTS) in England and Wales. If they work as teachers, they will be paid on the pay scale for unqualified teachers, unless they are working towards QTS through the Graduate Teacher Programme, in which case their school's governing body has the option of paying them as qualified teachers.

Schools (Performance Indicators)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what work is being done on the development of school and teacher performance indicators with particular reference to issues relating to schools with a large percentage of students for whom English is an additional language. [88680]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our Autumn Package of performance data for schools currently benchmarks school-level achievements by reference to the proportion of pupils with free school meals (as a general indicator of disadvantage), and presents estimates of pupil progress between NC Keystages based on national samples of linked individual performance records.

The Department, in close collaboration with its education partners, is developing a national system of individualised pupil records which will give assessments of the value added by all schools and the progress made by pupils within them. This initiative will allow comparison of the progress of pupils with similar prior attainments and backgrounds, including the state of their English language development. The introduction of national assessments of school value added are planned to come on stream with the publication of KS3 to GCSE/GNVQ information in the Performance Tables in Autumn 2000.

Our proposals for a national scheme of school and teacher performance awards do not have features which are specific for schools with varying proportions of pupils with English as an Additional Language. Nevertheless, the School Performance Award Scheme proposed in the Green Paper "Teachers: Meeting the challenge of change" will reward schools whose performance is consistently of a high standard, or of a markedly improving trend, given their general level of disadvantage. The new performance management arrangements for individual teachers will be based on agreed objectives, which will take account of local circumstances.

Educational Provision (Children)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what collaborative work he is undertaking with Health Ministers to ensure that all looked-after children receive a high-quality education. [88851]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department of Education and Employment and the Department of Health are committed to raising the standards of education achieved by looked-after children, to bring these much more closely into line with those of their peers. Local authorities, as corporate parents, have a key role to play. We are currently consulting on draft guidance to local authorities about the education of looked-after children, stressing that:

- local authority social services and education departments need to work effectively together to support children's educational needs;
- every school should have a designated teacher to liaise with social services;
- every looked-after child should have a Personal Education Plan—recording long-term aspirations as well as short-term objectives;
- care placements should be made only where education provision is also secured.

This guidance is one element in the joint strategy of the two Departments, channelled primarily through the Quality Protects programme, and Standards fund provision for school inclusion and special educational needs. Over the next few months, we will be developing that strategy in the light of consultation responses, to ensure effective implementation.

New Deal 50-plus Scheme

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if the earnings cap rules for people on the New Deal 50-plus scheme will take into account income from other sources with particular reference to investments and occupational pensions; and if he will make a statement; [89032]

(2) what will be the level of the earnings cap on income above which a person on the New Deal 50-plus scheme will be ineligible for an employment credit. [89033]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Our current proposals are that the Employment Credit will be paid only to people working full-time (over 30 hours a week) with income of less than £15,000 a year or part-time (16–30 hours a week) of £10,000 a year. The assessment of income will take into account earnings from the individual's employment, income from investments, income from property and occupational pensions. There will not be a capital test. The earnings limit is important to concentrate help on those most in need of added support in returning to work.

Disability Discrimination

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the National Disability Council's proposals for a revised Code of Practice on Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [89250]

Ms Hodge: We have today published the new Code of Practice on access to goods, facilities and services and it will come into force on 1 October 1999 (replacing the Code issued in July 1996). Copies have been placed in the Library. The Code is based entirely on the National Disability Council's proposals which were prepared following extensive consultation with disabled people, service providers and legal advisers.

The new Code provides guidance on the existing duties under Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, as well as those being implemented on 1 October. The Code gives practical examples of reasonable adjustments which can be made for disabled people and encourages service providers to adopt good practices when considering how to make their services and premises accessible to disabled people.

The Code of Practice is available from the Stationery Office (ISBN 0–11–271055–7) or from my Department's disability website (www.disability.gov.uk). The Code has been designed to be as accessible as possible and will be available in different formats, such as in Braille and on audio cassette. Further information and leaflets on the new provisions will become available over the summer.

International Labour Conference

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the White Paper on the instruments adopted at the 84 (Maritime) session of the International Labour Conference. [89251]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have today published a White Paper entitled "International Labour Conference" and placed copies in the Library.

WALES

Health Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he had with (a) health authorities and (b) health trusts in Wales, during April, prior to making his decision on the comprehensive spending review settlement for the health service in Wales, (i) in general and (ii) on the impact on capital projects in their areas of the decision not to make resources available for capital developments in 1999–2000. [87992]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: None. On 1 April, my right hon. Friend met health authority and NHS Trust representatives to discuss the financial position of the NHS, his spending decisions, and the fact that resources which might have been spent on new capital developments had been used to increase health authority revenue allocations.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the indicative figure used by his Department for capital expenditure within the National Health Service in Wales for 1999–2000 as at 1 April; and what is the figure under his comprehensive spending review. [87993]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend's announcement on NHS spending on 30 March included capital provision in 1999–2000 of some £83 million—£48 million for Trust discretionary expenditure and £35 million for ongoing major schemes. This represented a £10 million uplift over 1998–99 provision. On 18 May, my right hon. Friend also announced an additional £21 million over the next three years for the NHS from the capital modernisation fund. Prior to 30 March, additional capital expenditure of up to £24 million on new schemes in 1999–2000 was under consideration, but no decision had been taken on allocating this to particular schemes.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health sector capital schemes which had originally been intended to be commenced during the current financial year in Wales but which following the comprehensive spending review settlement made in April have not received capital allocation for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [87997]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Department considered proposals for public capital funding during August 1998 and provisionally approved 9 schemes for consideration for future capital funding:

Development of medium secure unit facilities at the Caswell Clinic, Bridgend;

Redevelopment of Mynydd Mawr Hospital, Llanelli;

Reprovision of mental health services for the Rhondda;

Development of a new community hospital to service North Merionydd/East Dwyfor;

Prince Charles Hospital, asbestos and fire precaution measures;

Bronglais General Hospital, repairs to external cladding;

Reprovision of Conwy Hospital;

Reprovision of residential services for learning disabilities—Gwent;

Remedial works to Iechyd Morgannwg Health Headquarters.

The proposals for Mynydd Mawr were subsequently withdrawn. The proposed scheme at Prince Charles Hospital is currently undergoing further review.

My right hon. Friend's NHS spending decisions did not allocate funding to these schemes in 1999–2000.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly.

NHS Trusts (Income and Expenditure)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will tabulate for each of the last three years for which figures are available for each NHS trust in Wales the total operating income and expenditure, the financial surplus or deficit, the external finance limit performance, the rate of return, management cost (M2), overhead costs, number of employees and the total staff employment costs. [88639]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I have arranged for copies of the tables requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

HEALTH

Quality Protects Action Plans

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what overall assessment he has made of the Quality Protects management action plans submitted by local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [89148]

Mr. Hutton: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the report "Mapping Quality In Children's Services: An Evaluation of Local Responses To The Quality Protects Programme".

When we launched the Quality Protects programme in September 1998, we required local authorities to submit annual Management Action Plans to show how they were intending to improve the management and delivery of children's social services. This report presents the key messages and findings from the first round of Management Action Plans (MAPs) which were received in January 1999. I am pleased that local authorities have responded with energy and urgency to the first stage of Quality Protects and that we were able to approve all 150 Quality Protects MAPs and authorise payment of the children's services grant for this year.

The report identifies many examples of good practice from across the country, but it also highlights major areas where improvement is urgently needed. It is now crucial that these plans are turned into action and we expect to see evidence of real progress by January 2000.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 636, for what reason the report of the day's proceedings of the workshop on the possible risks posed by porcine endogenous retroviruses has not yet been published. [88640]

Mr. Hutton: The Report of the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority Workshop on Porcine Endogenous Retroviruses was published on 23 June 1999. Copies can be obtained from the Department of Health, PO Box 410, Wetherby, LS23 7LL, Fax: 01937 845 381. The report will also be available on the UKXIRA website, address: www.doh.gov/ukxira.htm.

Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Transplant Surgery

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Under-Secretary's letter of 1 December 1998 (POH(6) 5437/66) on transplant surgery, what assessment he has made of Japanese research on tardigrades and trehalose and the stabilisation of the structure of cell membranes. [87385]

Mr. Hutton: The research mentioned is at a very early stage and it is likely to be several years before any clinical trials take place. We will be keeping a close interest in the progress, however, and assess any further findings as and when they emerge.

Gene Pool (Commercialisation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter from the Minister of State for Public Health of 4 January (POH/3/5437/69) what assessment he has made of the Icelandic experience in the commercialisation of the gene pool. [87513]

Ms Jowell: I believe that the question refers to the Icelandic initiative to set up a centralised health sector database.

This database consists of a collection of selected health data derived from medical records. The database does not contain samples of either human tissue or DNA.

The development of such a database raises important questions of privacy and consent which have been extensively discussed in Iceland, both by the public and during the passage of the relevant legislation. The licensing of the database has satisfied Icelandic law and they are satisfied that it does not break any relevant international conventions or agreements. I understand that considerable efforts have been made to inform the Icelandic public about the database and the right of an individual to refuse participation. I shall continue to receive information on this relatively new initiative as it develops.

Speech and Language Therapists

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students entered training for speech and language therapy in each year since 1995. [88417]

Mr. Denham: Between 1994–95 and 1997–98, the National Health Service was responsible for commissioning a small number of speech and language therapy places as reflected in the following table. During the same period, the Department for Education and Employment were also funding speech and language therapy education (see notes).

Since 1998, the National Health Service has assumed responsibility for all speech and language therapy training. This is also reflected in the table.

Number of National Health Service non medical education and training commissions for speech and language therapists

Year	Number
1996–97	74
1998–99	468
1999–2000	477

Notes:

Data for 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 shows actual intakes.

Data for 1998–99 shows planned intakes and is subject to change.

Data for 1999–2000 shows forecast intake and is subject to change.

Prior to 1998–99 funding was available from the Department for Education and Employment.

The apparent step change in the number of commissions in 1998–99 is as a result of changes to funding arrangements.

No data is available for the total number of training commissions between 1994–95 and 1997–98 since most of the training during this period was funded through mainstream DfEE education.

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time for a patient to be (a) seen and (b) treated by a speech and language therapist in each health authority. [88419]

Mr. Hutton: Information relating specifically to appointments with speech and language therapists is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of speech and language therapists have left the profession in each year since 1995. [88416]

Mr. Denham: This information is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unfilled posts there are for speech and language therapy in each health authority. [88418]

Mr. Denham: In January 1999, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, during his appearance at the House of Commons Health Committee, suggested that the Department should conduct a survey of staff shortages by the end of 1998–99. The results of this survey will be published in due course.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect on the asset base of the NHS of the increase in the number of PFI schemes. [88641]

Mr. Denham: Twenty five major hospital developments, worth almost £2.5 billion, have been given approval to proceed under the private finance initiative since 1 May 1997, 13 of which, worth nearly £1 billion, have already signed final contracts and begun building. As these developments will replace outdated hospital capacity with modern facilities and equipment, no separate assessment of their impact is necessary.

Bed-blocking (West Country)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to stop bed-blocking in each county in the West Country; and if he will make a statement. [88082]

Mr. Denham: The South West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive and the Southern Office of the social services inspectorate have been working closely with health and local authorities in the South West to ensure that robust local plans are in place to reduce the number of delayed discharges. The number of delayed discharges in the South West Region fell by 18 per cent. in the year to 31 March 1999.

Smoking in the Workplace

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to restrict smoking in the workplace. [88215]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's action on smoking was set out last December in our White Paper "Smoking Kills". The White Paper announced that the Health and Safety Commission would issue a consultative document asking for views about whether to introduce an Approved Code of Practice about smoking at work under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. The Commission intends to publish its consultative document at the end of July.

The draft Code on which the Commission is to consult gives advice to employers about how to devise and introduce, in consultation with their employees, appropriate smoking policies at work.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Belgian Food Contamination

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries which have had limitations placed on their exports by third parties as a consequence of the present Belgian food contamination situation. [87378]

Mr. Rooker: All EU member states, including the UK, currently have either bans or restrictions placed on food exports as a result of the problem of contaminated food in Belgium.

Mouse Breeding Facilities

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual cost of maintaining his Department's mouse breeding facilities; and what steps are taken to ensure that no mice are bred which are surplus to requirements. [87859]

Mr. Rooker: The annual running cost to maintain mouse breeding facilities at the two MAFF supported agencies is approximately £150,000 including staff costs.

All research projects which require mice follow a pre-planned experimental design which the agencies also clear with Home Office officials. This allows the number of each strain of mouse required by each project to be forecast in advance. By combining the requirements of each project, a breeding programme is devised which can be tailored to the research requirements.

Gluten

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage food producers to include gluten content on their products' labels. [87871]

Mr. Rooker: In the last year, we have amended the Food Labelling Regulations 1996 to require "starch" and "modified starch" used as ingredients of foods to declare their specific vegetable origin where they may contain gluten. These changes will become compulsory with effect from 14 February 2000.

We are taking every opportunity to press the European Commission to bring forward more general proposals for identifying ingredients which could cause allergic or intolerance reactions and develop rules for gluten-free claims.

Poultry (Belgium)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Belgian authorities notified the United Kingdom Government that some of its poultry products were contaminated with dioxins. [87844]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement given by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 480–81.

Inland Fishery

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the moneys available to the Environment Agency for inland fishery work for each of the last five years. [88193]

Mr. Morley: The information requested for England and Wales is as follows:

£ million

Year	Grant in aid	Licence and other revenue	Total
1994–95	11.1	12.6	23.7
1995–96	9.7	13.7	23.4
1996–97	7.5	15.1	22.4
1997–98	7.4	15.2	22.6
1998–99	[1]22.1	—	[1]22.1
1999–2000	7.4	14.7	22.1

[1] In 1998–99 there was a temporary change in the rules whereby all revenue from licence fees was returned to Treasury but with an equivalent increase in grant in aid

Note:

Figures showing revenue and total income for 1999–2000 are forecasts only

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost of the study announced by his Department into the discarding of fish at sea; and by whom it will be funded. [88576]

Mr. Morley: The total cost of the study into discarding of fish at sea to which my Department is contributing is 313,000 euro (approximately £205,000). It is mainly funded by the EU Commission together with national contributions from France, Netherlands and the UK. The UK contribution, which will be met by my Department, is £25,000 spread over the 18-month life of the project.

Small Abattoirs

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will publish the European Commission's response to his letter seeking clarification on the existence of derogations for smaller abattoirs and cutting plants which go beyond purely structural requirements; [88232]

(2) if the low-throughput abattoirs identified under Directive 64/433 are required to have the same level of veterinary supervision as the fully approved premises defined in Article 10 of the same directive. [88233]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The level and frequency of supervision of licensed low throughput (permanently derogated) slaughterhouses and cutting plants is under consideration as part of the Meat Charges Impact Study following recent guidance on this subject from the European Commission. An announcement will be made once the Study is completed. A copy of the Commission's guidance will be placed in the Library of the House at that time.

Extensification Schemes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he plans to make to the Commission to ensure that the extensification proposals take account of the larger stocking densities on British farms. [88347]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Member states have discretion to apply either one of two models for making extensification payments in the beef sector. The single-tier model offers 100 euros per head of eligible livestock to producers with stocking rates of less than 1.4 livestock units (LUs) per hectare, while the two-tier model offers 33 euros per head to producers with stocking rates of 2 LUs or less and 77 euros to producers with stocking rates of less than 1.6 LUs. I shall shortly be consulting the industry on which model we should adopt but would recommend the two-tier model (for the introduction of which we pressed in the negotiations of CAP reform) as being more nearly suited to UK farming practice.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of farmers who would undertake extensification schemes if the stocking rates were set at (a) 1.6, (b) 2.0 and (c) 2.5 animals per hectare. [88346]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The Government do not have at their disposal sufficient data on the basis of which to make reliable estimates of the kind requested by the right hon. Member. Our "best guess" is that, were the UK to adopt the single-tier model for extensification payments, about 50 per cent. of the 73,000 or so producers receiving such payments under current rules would no longer qualify for them. We believe that with the two-tier model, this figure might reduce to 20 per cent.

Calf Processing Scheme

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the consequences to the beef sector of discontinuing the calf processing scheme from the end of July. [88349]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Closure of the Calf Processing Aid Scheme on 31 July will benefit the beef sector. By removing the artificial floor in the market for calves, it will encourage UK production of manufacturing quality beef to displace imports.

Lindane

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the relative risk to operators in the application of lindane (a) in closed systems for seed treatment and (b) in open systems for fumigation or other purposes; [88377]

(2) what assessment he has made of the alternative pesticides to lindane for the treatment before sowing of (a) cereal seed against wireworm and (b) oil seed against flea beetle; [88376]

(3) if he will defer withdrawal of lindane for those applications for which no suitable alternative pesticide is available. [88375]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The Government's first priority in respect of pesticides is the protection of people and the environment. In taking decisions, we are informed by the expect advice of the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

In the case of lindane, the Committee considered the data available from the UK and EU reviews of lindane on effects on people and the environment. In particular, the Committee assessed the risk to operators from each of the approved uses of lindane and advised that exposure during the seed treatment process was unacceptably high. On this basis, the Committee advised and the Government accepted that this use of lindane should end, subject to any representations regarding this decision.

In addition, the Committee advised that further data were required for other uses, specifically sprays applied to soil with subsequent incorporation, agricultural and horticultural smokes and dry powder applications, to refine the operator exposure assessment. The Government also accepted this advice.

Companies have been given until 28 June to make representations and we will consider any further cases they choose to make. However, the Government do not consider the absence of alternatives to be a reason to delay the withdrawal of pesticide approvals where unacceptable risks from short-term exposures have been identified. In the case of uses of lindane treatment of cereal seed against wireworm and oil seed against flea beetle, there are other approved products.

Milk Quota

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will oppose proposals in the Council of Ministers for the allocation of extra milk quota to Ireland and Spain. [88356]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The dairy reform proposals in the Agenda 2000 package agreed by the European Council on 24–25 March 1999 included specific allocations of milk quota to Italy, Spain, Greece, the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland, and a 1.5 per cent. linear increase in quota, phased in over three years, for all other member states including the UK. The legal texts of the Regulations implementing this agreement were adopted by the Agriculture Council on 17 May 1999.

Bovine Passports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current average time it takes to obtain a bovine passport. [88348]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Currently, the British Cattle Movement Service send out around 90 per cent. of passports within three days of applications being received at the BCMS building in Workington.

School Milk

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission on the EU subsidy for the supply of milk to certain school children. [88373]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Minister raised the subject at the last Agriculture Council where he received considerable support for our view about the value of the current scheme.

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the costs of veterinary medicines in (a) the UK and (b) other European countries. [88355]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The pricing of veterinary medicinal products is not controlled by either UK or European Community legislation. Decisions on the wholesale costs of veterinary medicines are matters for the companies manufacturing the products, taking into account commercial factors such as development and production costs and anticipated volume of sales in the member state concerned. None the less, we have received representations about comparatively high prices of veterinary medicinal products in the UK and we are carefully considering the issues and whether further action is called for.

Flood Meadows

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions he has taken in 1999 in respect of the protection of flood meadows. [87388]

Mr. Morley: The importance of flood meadows and the need for their protection is recognised in the UK Biodiversity Action Plan for coastal and floodplain grazing marsh which encompasses flood meadows. Our English agri-environment schemes, including the ESA and Countryside Stewardship schemes, provide payments for farmers and land managers for the protection and enhancement of this habitat.

In the three years 1999–2000 to 2001–02, an additional £40 million will be available in England for improvements and enhancements to the agri-environment schemes. Flood meadow land, along with other priorities, will benefit from this extra funding.

To date, over 8,000 ha of land have entered into Countryside Stewardship and over 40,000 ha are under ESA agreement in wet grassland areas identified by English Nature, which includes flood meadow habitats. These areas are target habitats under both schemes and additional land will be coming under agreement this year.

On 25 May, I announced proposals to add payments under the Countryside Stewardship scheme for raising and maintaining high water levels in grassland, including flood meadows.

During 1999, MAFF has continued to make good progress with its Water Level Management Plan initiative which is also an important tool in the protection of flood meadows. It has set up a Water Level Management Plan Advisory Group to encourage production of plans for floodplain wetlands. One of the first tasks of the Group is to produce additional guidance on preparation of WLMPs to help operating authorities. This task is progressing well and it is hoped that the guidance will be published shortly.

In March 1999, MAFF and the operating authorities agreed a new interim target of completing WLMPs for all European Sites by the end of March 2000, and for all other SSSIs by the end of 2000.

In the last 12 months, MAFF has approved grant aid in relation to WLMPs for two Internal Drainage Boards. These are the Rivers Idle and Ryton IDB for refurbishment of Wiseton Pumping Station (total cost £71,000) and the Lower Yare Third IDB for pump replacement (total cost £22,000).

Water Discharge Levy

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from (a) the British Trout Association and (b) the Country Landowners Association concerning water discharges levies made by the Environment Agency. [88413]

Mr. Morley: I met the chairman and other members of the British Trout Association on 15 June and they made clear to me their concern about the level of discharge charges. I have received no representations on this topic from the Country Landowners Association.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons Convention

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role his Department is playing in the implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention. [89515]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department is playing a full part in meeting the UK's obligations under the Convention. Since the convention's entry into force in April 1997, the UK has received 28 routine verification inspections, of which 19 have been to defence or former defence facilities in the UK. All have been conducted successfully by the international Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, who oversee the treaty. Earlier this month, we held the latest in a series of successful exercises to simulate an incoming challenge inspection (which could be requested by another State Party) to a defence facility in the UK, in which inspectors and observers from the OPCW and overseas countries participated.

I am pleased to report that Ambassador Bustani, Director General of the OPCW, announced yesterday that CBD Porton Down has achieved the status of Designated Laboratory under the CWC, following its success in a series of demanding proficiency tests. This means that Porton is internationally recognised as competent to carry out analysis of chemical samples to the highest levels of accuracy. Such samples could be taken during routine or challenge inspections, including in cases of the alleged use of chemical weapons. Porton is one of only 12 laboratories worldwide to achieve this status.

Yesterday's announcement confirms both the world class scientific and technical excellence of Porton and the UK's full commitment to ridding the world of chemical weapons.

Meteorological Office, Newcastle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the Meteorological Office in Newcastle; and if he will make a statement. [88280]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Eric Martlew, dated 30 June 1999:

I am replying to your question to The Secretary of State for Defence about Newcastle weather centre. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Met. Office.

Following a comprehensive review of our forecasting processes, we recently announced plans to rationalise our national network of weather centres. The opportunities offered by improved technology will allow us to make greater use of automation in the production of weather forecasts and concentrate our activities at fewer locations, thereby maintaining the quality of the services we offer at a much reduced cost. As a result, we plan to close 5 weather centres over the next 2½ years, including Newcastle by the end of 2001.

I am confident that the accuracy of forecasts will remain as high as ever in the Newcastle area, and indeed improve as meteorology continues to advance. In particular, we aim to provide a better service to the public through closer working relationships with the BBC regions. We will also continue to collect observational data locally. Knowledge of local geography and meteorological conditions will always be important, but the latest advances in technology together with improved communications, will enable us to prepare and deliver forecasts remotely, more cost-effectively.

I can assure you that we remain wholly committed to our primary aim of providing our customers, now and in the future, with the range of services they require, in a timely and effective manner, at a price they can afford.

Service Children's Education

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure (a) parity of standards and (b) equality of opportunity between Service Children's Education and local authority provision in the UK. [88361]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Service Children's Education was established as a Defence Agency specifically to provide an education service to the children of Service and MOD personnel serving overseas, that conforms, as far as possible, to the scope and standards required by the Education Acts in England and Wales. Key Targets are set annually and those for 1999 were announced in the House on 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 329. Performance against Key Targets is reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts which are laid before the House each year prior to the summer recess. To date, the Agency's performance has been slightly ahead of the UK LEA average.

The Agency's ownership is delegated by the Secretary of State for Defence to the Adjutant General, who is assisted in this task by an Owner's Advisory Board, the membership of which includes senior representatives from the DfEE, Ofsted, and Wiltshire LEA. All the Agency's teachers are UK qualified and all the Agency's schools are subject to regular inspections by Ofsted. The Agency is implementing all the Government's latest education initiatives, in particular the literacy and numeracy strategies, in its schools worldwide. It has also successfully introduced the provision of free nursery education for 4 year olds in 48 nursery and pre-school locations worldwide.

Parents have the right to express a preference in their choice of SCE school, although there is clearly less opportunity for choice in the more isolated locations. Although the Agency does try to meet Special Education Needs in its schools, it is not always possible to accommodate children with certain, more specialised needs especially in those areas lacking appropriate inter-agency support.

We have also taken action, through the Families Task Force, to ensure that local education authorities are sensitive to the position of Service children returning from abroad. There is now specific guidance on this point in the DfEE Code of Practice on Schools Admission Policy.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, under the public-private partnership proposals for DERA, that organisation will be deemed to carry the full risk of bankruptcy for the purpose of being able to borrow freely in the private capital market. [87372]

Mr. Spellar: No decisions have been made on the form of a PPP for DERA. However, regardless of the precise form of PPP, the Government would wish to ensure that it had rights to retain access to any strategic capabilities for use only in extreme circumstances, such as bankruptcy.

Millennium Compliance (Russia)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of co-operation with Russia over year 2000 compliance. [87654]

Mr. Spellar: MOD officials took part in discussions with Russia on the Millennium compliance problem under the auspices of the NATO-Russia Permanent Joint Council prior to the commencement of the air campaign in the Balkans, when Russia suspended formal co-operation on defence issues. In April, a technical expert from the MOD attended a G8 Y2K meeting in Moscow. The possibility of trilateral talks between the UK, the US and Russia is being pursued.

Mutual Defence Agreement (USA)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the number of personnel currently working in the United States under the auspices of the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement, (b) which US facility they are working in and (c) their purpose for being there. [88136]

Mr. Spellar: There are four UK officials serving in the US under the auspices of the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement (MDA). All are located in the British Embassy, Washington, DC. Their duties are to facilitate the conduct of bilateral business within the provisions of the MDA. In addition, there are three staff seconded from AWE Aldermaston to the US to assist with the technical development of facilities of mutual interest. Currently, two are stationed at the Los Alamos National Laboratory and one at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visits of UK personnel to the US under the auspices of the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement have occurred in the last 12 months. [88138]

Mr. Spellar: During the period 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999, a total of 235 visits to the US, involving one or more individuals, took place under the auspices of the 1958 UK/US Mutual Defence Agreement.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many EIVRs have been generated as a result of exchanges of information under the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement in each of the last five years; and if he will place unclassified versions in the Library. [88139]

Mr. Spellar: Two Exchanges of Information by Visit and Report, EIVRs, have occurred within the last five years. One, on the subject of Test Monitoring, was generated in 1997 and first met in 1998. The most recent, on matters concerned with the future contract to manage the Atomic Weapons Establishment, was both created and met in 1998. The details of such exchanges are invariably classified and are withheld under the terms of Exemption Category 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations. Accordingly, no unclassified version is, or will be, available.

Aldermaston

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many French personnel have visited AWE Aldermaston in the last 12 months. [88140]

Mr. Spellar: During the period 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999, a total of 82 French personnel visited AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visits of US personnel to AWE Aldermaston have occurred in the last 12 months. [88137]

Mr. Spellar: During the period 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999, a total of 110 visits to AWE Aldermaston by US personnel, involving one or more individuals, took place.

Tanks (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tanks were (a) destroyed and (b) significantly damaged during the military action against Yugoslavia. [88079]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 24 June 1999]: Now that KFOR troops have deployed into Kosovo, a fuller assessment of the damage inflicted on Yugoslav forces is under way. This will take some time to complete. But the measure of the campaign's success lies in the fact that it resulted in the withdrawal of Milosevic's troops from Kosovo, the entry of KFOR and the return of the refugees.

Controlled Substances (Emissions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the letter of 3 October 1998, D/MIN/(DP)(TG)/3521/98M, on atmospheric pollution, what collaborative research and development programmes aimed at identifying further alternatives to ozone-depleting substances in the applications where they are still necessary have been carried out in the last nine months; and what reduction has taken place in controlled substances where acceptable alternatives are available. [87386]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 29 June 1999]: In my response to the hon. Member's earlier question on this subject on 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 312–13, I reported on the continuing progress made by the MOD in reducing its use of ozone depleting substances.

Since the beginning of the year, a number of CFC and halon systems have been converted to alternative substances. The Royal Navy has completed the conversion or replacement of refrigeration plant on HMS Fearless, HMS Illustrious, HMS Leeds Castle, HMS Sultan, HMS Lancaster and RFA Black Rover. Modification kits have been procured for conversion of refrigeration plants on HMS Spartan, HMS Torbay and HMS Trenchant, and for a chilled water plant on HMS Spartan. Installation of a new chilled water plant has started on HMS Torbay. Action has been taken to procure the kits for conversion of refrigeration plants on the Type 23 frigates. The Army has completed trials of alternatives to halon fire extinguishants for use in in-service armoured vehicle engine compartments and an acceptable fire extinguishant has been identified. A programme of work to convert these systems is now being drawn up. Work to convert CFC environment cooling systems in armoured vehicles has also started. The Defence Procurement Agency has completed the majority of its trials of alternative refrigerants in equipment for which it is responsible and the final report on the conversion of the Challenger 2 engine fire protection systems is expected during July. The Royal Air Force has completed the conversion of refrigerators on all but two of the E3 Sentry aircraft; these remaining aircraft will be modified as soon as operational commitments allow. In a number of cases, equipment that used ozone-depleting substances has been decommissioned as surplus to requirements. At DERA Chertsey, for example, this has reduced the installed quantity of CFC refrigerants by approximately 230 tonnes.

The use of CFC refrigerants will be necessary until conversion programmes can be completed or, where conversion is not technically and economically feasible, until equipment is removed from service. For halon systems which protect, amongst others, existing aircraft, ship machinery spaces and armoured vehicle crew compartments, acceptable alternatives have not been identified, despite considerable international effort. The MOD Corporate Research Programme is funding a study by DERA into alternative fire extinguishants for use in normally occupied enclosed spaces. The study has identified two classes of material with promising fire extinguishing properties. These are the tropodegradable bromoalkenes and a range of phosphorus-containing compounds. The aim is to identify one or more chemicals with good performance and acceptable toxicological and environmental characteristics. This work is being undertaken in close collaboration with the US Advanced Agent Working Group and the US Department of Defence's Next Generation Fire Suppression Technology Program. The Royal Navy continues its sponsorship of research into water mist technologies for potential use in fire protection in new warships. The work has demonstrated that low pressure fine water spray systems with certain additives can give a very effective performance and this work will be validated with real-scale tests over the next 18 months. Close contact is being maintained with the US Navy and US Coast Guard who are also developing water-based technologies for use in future ships.

Security Facilities Executive

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to market test services previously supplied to it by the Security Facilities Executive. [87775]

Mr. Spellar: SAFE, now the Security Facilities Division of the Cabinet Office, continues to supply specialist security advice and services. The MOD has not market tested these services.

France (Stockpile Programme)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the broad areas of assistance that have been provided to date to France to aid their stockpile stewardship programme. [88141]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD continues to maintain contacts with France on a range of technical and scientific issues relating to nuclear weapons. I am withholding more specific information under the terms of Exemption Category I of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations.

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88484]

Mr. Spellar: Ministry of Defence officials have attended meetings of POLARM, an ad hoc EU working party on European armaments policy, on four occasions in the last 12 months.

Aldermaston Health and Safety at Work Committee

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place copies of the minutes of the nine meetings of the Aldermaston Health and Safety at Work Committee in the Library. [89018]

Mr. Spellar: I have arranged for this to be done.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rover

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the new BMW-Rover deal on United Kingdom suppliers to the company. [88501]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The new R30 model this investment secures comes into production in 2003. Rover have therefore yet to open discussions with suppliers. The action taken by the Government to secure the future of Longbridge will provide opportunities for UK suppliers which otherwise would not have been available.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the conditions he has set for the Government investment in Rover, Longbridge. [88503]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The exact conditions of the aid package to Rover are commercially confidential.

Small Business Service

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for the Small Business Service; and if he will make a statement. [89517]

Mr. Byers: The Government are planning to set up a Small Business Service with three main tasks: to act as a voice for small businesses at the heart of Government; to simplify and improve the quality and coherence of Government support for small businesses; to help small firms deal with regulation and ensure small firms' interests are properly considered in future regulation.

We want to ensure that opportunities for enterprise are open to all; and to create an environment where more entrepreneurs emerge and are successful.

The Small Business Service will be headed by a Chief Executive who will report to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and have direct access to Ministers across Government. He or she will have a substantial and wide-ranging role, including:

a right to be consulted on all new Government legislation presented to Parliament in Westminster that is likely to affect small businesses; and a right to be consulted on all new proposals for business support likely to affect small business in England; representing the interests and concerns of small firms and ensuring they are taken into account by Government; responsibility for ensuring that all Government services directed primarily or mainly to small businesses are accessible through Small Business Service local outlets, thus taking forward the Business Link network; responsibility for ensuring that the delivery of business support services reflects local priorities so that it is business-led and Government-backed. In addition, local delivery arrangements will be shaped by the overall economic strategies developed by the Regional Development Agencies.

I am today launching a public consultation on the Small Business Service, which includes a range of proposals in addition to the role and responsibilities of the Chief Executive.

One particular proposal is to set up the Small Business Service as a Next Steps Agency within the Department of Trade and Industry as from April 2000.

Other key proposals include:

creating an independent advisory body—the "Enterprise Council" to advise the Chief Executive and report regularly to Ministers on matters of concern to small business; making the Small Business Service responsible for managing the Government's Enterprise Fund; making the Small Business Service responsible for providing practical help with payroll administration; giving the Small Business Service responsibility for providing co-ordinated information for small firms on their regulatory obligations and for developing ways to work with regulators so as to ensure that they provide information and guidance material tailored to the needs of small businesses.

Copies of the consultation document and a summary leaflet with the main proposals have been placed in the Library of the House. I am inviting comments on my proposals by 30 September.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for 1998. [89518]

Dr. Howells: The 25th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1998 to 31 December 1998. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Interconnector (France)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the amount of electricity received via the interconnector with France in each of the last five years. [88205]

Mr. Battle: The following table shows the quantities of electricity imported from France in each of the last five years:

	GWh
1994	16,887
1996	16,677
1998	12,819

These imports amounted to 3½ per cent. of United Kingdom electricity requirements in 1998.

Mineworkers (Respiratory Diseases)

Mr. HomeRobertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of compensation payments to former mineworkers affected by respiratory diseases in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) each of the English regions; how many claims are still outstanding; and when he expects the process to be completed. [87584]

Mr. Battle: As at 17 June 1999, IRISC, the Department's claim handling agent, have received some 71,500 claims from former miners and their dependants. These can be broken down into (a) Scotland—5,500; (b) Wales—20,500; and (c) North West—4,100; North East—7,700; North and West Yorkshire—4,700; South Yorkshire—14,100; East Midlands—10,100; West Midlands—3,400; South—1,200; Overseas—200.

The contract for a national programme of spirometry testing for all respiratory disease claimants has been awarded to Healthcall Services Ltd. Healthcall have established testing centres in Newport, Cardiff, Swansea, Newcastle, Sheffield, Nottingham, Leeds and Glasgow and will shortly be opening at least 17 more in other coalmining areas. The programme of spirometry will enable us to make further interim payments beyond the £25 million already offered and, in some cases, full and final offers to those who may not wish to pursue their claim further.

Discussions have taken place with Scottish solicitors and similar handling arrangements to those in England and Wales are close to being agreed to compensate ex-miners in Scotland.

Environmental Measures

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the emission savings that could be achieved (a) by an additional

5 per cent. tax on domestic energy consumption and (b) by the introduction of the climate change levy; and if he will make a statement. [88318]

Mr. Battle: For social policy reasons, the Government have no intention of introducing new taxes on domestic consumption of fuel and power. The climate change levy will encourage energy efficiency in business and is expected to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010.

Electricity Supply Interruptions

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take in response to the report on Electricity Supply Interruptions. [88308]

Mr. Battle: While we recognise that security of supply is of paramount importance even in open markets, ensuring this is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply. The report, which he commissioned, followed the disruption to electricity supplies as a result of gale force winds on 26 December 1998. The report contains a number of recommendations concerning electricity distribution network performance, restoration of supplies, communications with customers and payments to customers under Standards of Performance Regulations.

Comments on the full list of recommendations, together with suggestions for other areas where further investigation is merited, were invited, and the period for those comments ends on 25 June. Any feedback will be used to inform the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets' continuing review of the companies' performance.

Aero Engine Manufacturers (US)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the (a) direct and (b) indirect support given by the United States Government to United States aero engine manufacturers. [88122]

Mr. Battle: My Department is aware of the substantial support the United States Government provide to their aero engine manufacturers, mainly through various NASA and Department of Defence programmes, while noting that the US economy is six times that of the UK.

The key US civil programmes which have supported propulsion research and development include NASA's programmes on High Speed Civil Transport; Advanced Subsonic Technologies; and Advanced General Aviation Transport Experiment.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on legally-binding targets for renewables in the EU; and if he will make a statement. [86859]

Mr. Battle: I have received letters from Greenpeace, RSPB and Climate Network Europe.

The adoption of targets can assist in promoting the greater use of renewable energy. In the UK, we are working towards a target of 10 per cent. electricity from renewables as soon as possible. We hope to achieve this by 2010. Other member states have set their own targets.

Support schemes for renewables should be designed to operate in the most cost-effective way possible. This will require the introduction, in due course, of a system which promotes competition between renewables providers, in order to ensure that costs are driven down as far as is practicable. I want to see renewables come in from the margins into the mainstream, and I believe that competition-based schemes are the right way we will achieve this.

I remain committed to the promotion of renewables. I pressed the case at the Energy Council on 11 May, called for action by the Commission, and sought to persuade all member states to implement national strategies to increase significantly the contribution of renewables to Europe's energy supply.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussion he has had with (a) BAe and (b) other UK aerospace companies about the restructuring of the industry; and if he will make a statement. [88873]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 29 June 1999]: I and officials in my Department maintain regular contact with BAe and other UK aerospace companies about restructuring and other strategic issues facing the industry. When I attended the ministerial meeting of Airbus partners and the Paris Air Show recently, I was able to meet a wide range of industry's key players for this purpose.

Kosovo

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to assist and co-ordinate efforts by British companies in reconstruction projects in Kosovo and the neighbouring countries. [88596]

Mr. Battle: At the Secretary of State's initiative, the Department has already established a joint Government/ private sector Taskforce to promote and co-ordinate the UK's response to the reconstruction arising in Kosovo; its prime objective is to ensure that the UK is co-ordinated to play their role in the rebuilding process. The Taskforce, which has already met twice, is chaired by Nigel Thompson of Ove Arup; the other private sector representatives on the Taskforce are from: AMEC, Mott MacDonald, Kennedy Construction, Taylor Woodrow, Crown Agents, British Consultants Bureau and the Confederation of British Industry.

All the private sector members of the Taskforce are well aware that they are on it as representatives of the UK business community generally, not their own companies. As all the companies represented on the Taskforce have seats on national or international bodies covering their sector interests, this is second nature to them. These industry bodies are the channels through which the messages from the Taskforce are being disseminated to the business community more generally. Indeed, to reinforce the message that the Taskforce is representing the interests of all UK companies, the minutes of its meetings are circulated freely to all interested parties.

Although in existence for only a very short time, the Taskforce is already making good progress. I am leading a group of six companies on a visit to Kosovo between 28 and 29 June to assess the initial likely reconstruction opportunities, and how best UK companies can position themselves so that they are able to play their role in the rebuilding of Kosovo. A post-mission conference, organised by my Department, is being held on 1 July so that the findings of the visit can be disseminated more widely to UK companies.

Initially, the work of the Taskforce will concentrate on Kosovo; but in due course it is hoped that it will also be able to focus on the wider region.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the timetable for the compensation payments awarded by the High Court to be paid to the former miners diagnosed with Vibration White Finger; and how many people (a) are eligible for payments, (b) are awaiting payments and (c) have received payment in full. [87984]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 24 June 1999]: The Department proposes to settle the bulk of compensation payments awarded by the High Court to former miners diagnosed with Vibration White Finger (VWF) as soon as practically possible, the majority being settled by March 2001.

(a) To date the Department has received some 42,000 claims.

(b) As at 20 June 1999 there were 37,222 claims outstanding at IRISC, the Department's claim handling agents. However, it is difficult to give an accurate total of claimants awaiting payment until medical evidence has been obtained and an assessment of liability in each of these cases has been completed.

(c) As at 20 June 1999 2,748 claimants have received payments in full.

We have awarded the contract for the delivery of the medical assessments to the SEMA Group and are hopeful that significant offers of full and final payments will start flowing in the late summer.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of benefit payments made to pensioners were paid by automated credit transfer in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will provide a comparable figure for the payment of benefits by automated credit transfer to non-pensioners. [88109]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 24 June 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

In the year ending 31 March 1999, 14.5 per cent. of all Retirement Pension and Widows Pension payments were made by automated credit transfer (ACT). The percentage of Retirement Pension and Widows Pension clients receiving payment by ACT as at 31 May 1999 was 43 per cent.

In the year ending 31 March 1999, 15 per cent. of all benefit payments made to clients in receipt of benefits other than Retirement Pension and Widows Pension were paid by ACT. The percentage of clients receiving benefits other than Retirement Pension and Widows Pension by ACT as at 31 May 1999 was 28 per cent.

The reason for the difference between the percentage of payments made by ACT and the percentage of clients being paid by ACT is that, in general terms, clients who are paid by ACT receive payments less frequently than those clients paid by order book or girocheque.

Supermarkets (Local Production)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to seek means of encouraging supermarket companies to facilitate the sale of goods produced within the vicinity of their outlets; and if he will make a statement. [87996]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The sourcing of supplies in supermarkets is a matter for the commercial judgment of retailers rather than Government. "Food from Britain" are working with the multiple retailers to encourage level sourcing and several major supermarket chains are now showing more interest in regional products.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

FCO Establishment (Morwenstow)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) UK personnel and (b) US personnel are based at his Department's establishment at Morwenstow, Cornwall; and what is the rank of the most senior (i) UK officer and (ii) US officer. [88637]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 29 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 22 June 1999, Official Report, column 360. It is Government policy not to provide details about the staffing and organisation of the intelligence services. This information is withheld under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 14 June 1999, Official Report, column 31, if he will list the detailed steps (i) taken, (ii) under consideration and (iii) rejected on the recommendations from Panel 2000. [88601]

Mr. Hoon: All the recommendations in the Panel 2000 Consultation Document have been accepted following a broad welcome during the consultation process. At its meeting on 17 December the Panel gave priority to the recommendations on one stop shops, showcasing, a campaign in Germany in 2000, and the opportunities offered by Millennium activities to promote Britain abroad. Progress has been made in all of these areas as well as on implementation of other recommendations. We remain engaged with individual Panel members about further ways of enhancing how Britain is perceived. The full Panel will meet in the second half of this year to assess progress.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is offering to (a) the Yugoslav authorities and (b) the Kosovar refugees and returnees to provide post-trauma counselling to children affected by the war. [88609]

Mr. Foulkes: The UK will play its part in international efforts to meet real humanitarian needs within Serbia. But we expect to provide assistance through intermediaries such as the UN agencies and non-governmental organisations, rather than directly to the Yugoslav authorities.

We are supporting the provision of psycho-social assistance to Kosovar refugee children in neighbouring countries. Part of our contribution of £2.25 million to United Nations Children's Fund's (UNICEF) regional programme will support help for traumatised children. We are also funding training for care providers in Macedonia through the Medical Foundation for the Care of Victims of Torture.

Through our Humanitarian Assistance Field Office in Pristina, we will continue to identify further areas of support in accordance with the needs of the returning refugees and the displaced people of Kosovo.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment is being made of the environmental effects of NATO's military action in Yugoslavia; and if she will place in the Library copies of the work done in this area by the United Nations Environment Programme. [88653]

Mr. Foulkes: A team of environmental experts from the UN-sponsored Balkans Task Force on the Environment and Human Settlement will carry out a full scale assessment of the environmental impact of the conflict on the region. They paid a preliminary visit to Serbia and Montenegro earlier this month.

Reports of work already done in this area are available on the internet at http://www.grid.unep.ch/btf, as will that of the full-scale assessment mission when it is available. We will arrange to place a copy of the full-scale report in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Planning Procedures

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he intends to bring forward to clarify planning procedures where the planning authority has a possible conflict of interest over a piece of land. [88176]

Mr. Raynsford: The procedures to be followed when a local authority has an interest in land for which a planning application is made are set out in the Town and Country Planning General Regulations 1992, with guidance contained in DOE Circular 19/92. The general principle underlying these Regulations is that local authorities must make planning applications in the same way as any other person applying for planning permission. The proposals must be advertised in the usual manner. However, applications may not be determined by a committee or officer responsible for the management of the land or buildings concerned. If it is intended to approve such a proposal, and it is not in accordance with the provisions of the development plan in force in the area, the application must be notified to the Secretary of State so that he can decide whether it should be "called in" for his own determination. We have no evidence to suggest that the procedures are unclear.

Housing Associations

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what checks he makes on the administrative overheads of housing associations; [88178]

(2) what checks he undertakes of the salaries paid to the chief executives and other senior officers of housing associations. [88179]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Corporation, sponsored by my Department, is responsible for regulating the activities of housing associations, now known as Registered Social Landlords (RSLs). RSLs are independent bodies, and members of their governing bodies serve in a voluntary capacity. The setting of salaries for chief executives and other senior executives is a matter for each RSL's board.

The Housing Corporation measures RSLs' performance annually against performance standards which cover their propriety, probity, financial management and accountability. It requires RSLs to publish in their annual report and accounts details of the remuneration of any executive earning more than £40,000 per annum. As part of its performance review process, the Corporation assesses RSLs' accounts and other financial information and publishes performance indicators for England's 371 largest RSLs. These include specific indicators on management and maintenance costs and on staffing costs.

The Corporation has also put in place a Best Value framework for RSLs which expects them to hold down and reduce their running costs (including salaries) whilst improving the quality of services provided to their residents.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what monitoring he undertakes where housing previously under the control of a local authority has been transferred to a housing association, with particular reference to (a) rent levels, (b) repairs, (c) new building and (d) specialist provision. [88180]

Mr. Raynsford: Where local authority housing has been transferred to a registered social landlord, the Housing Corporation is responsible for monitoring the performance of the new landlord.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with housing associations about rent levels during the last year. [88181]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has discussed rent levels with the National Housing Federation, the representative body for registered social landlords (RSLs), on several occasions. We also meet representatives of individual RSLs from time to time, when rents may be one of the issues under discussion.

Rail Crossing, Rovie

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the safety of the rail crossing at Rovie, Rogart, Sutherland; and what response he has made. [89088]

Mrs. Liddell: The Secretary of State has recently received an application from Railtrack for an Order under the Level Crossing Act 1983 to authorise the most appropriate safety measures for the level crossing at Rovie. Railtrack has written to the Highland Council giving them two months to make any representations on Railtrack's proposals to the Secretary of State. My Department has also received a copy of a letter written by the Highland Councillor for the area to the Secretary of State for Scotland commenting on safety at this level crossing. In deciding the most appropriate safety measures for this crossing the Secretary of State will also take advice from the Health and Safety Executive.

Household Projections (Hampshire)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 28 June 1999, Official Report, column 26, on new households in Hampshire, what assessment he has made of the reasons for the increase in the number of projected households since the 1992-based household projection. [89255]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Sawford) on 29 March 1999, Official Report, columns 470–74.

Health and Safety Appraisal

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the strategic appraisal of Health and Safety which he announced on 30 March. [89575]

Mr. Meacher: I will be launching a public consultation document entitled "Revitalising Health and Safety" tomorrow, jointly with the Health and Safety Commission. Copies will be placed in the House Libraries. This is an important initiative aimed at injecting new impetus into the health and safety agenda. Everyone concerned with health and safety is encouraged to respond to this consultation.

Driving Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Driving Standards Agency's written submission to the Minister recommending the closure of a Driving Test Centre is not made publicly available; and if he will make it his policy to publish such submissions in future. [86257]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The reasons why a test centre might be closed are put into the public domain as part of public consultation about the issue. To protect the integrity of decision-making, we have no plans to publish policy advice from officials to Ministers. This is in accordance with the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, exemption number 2—internal discussions and advice.

Speed Policy

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what organisations have been or will be invited to take part in the speed policy review; and what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure maximum involvement by professional organisations in the speed policy review process. [86349]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The full list of those who will be invited to take part has yet to be finalised, but it will include professional organisations suggested by the relevant divisions in DETR and other Government Departments.

Officials have already met the Automobile Association, Royal Automobile Club, County Surveyors' Society, Association of Chief Police Officers, the groups represented by the Slower Speeds Initiative.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make available a speed policy document for consultation. [86350]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is proposed to have a consultation document available for consideration towards the end of July.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the speed policy review announced in the white paper, A New Deal For Transport. [86348]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave our hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Bradley) on 9 June 1999, Official Report, columns 319–20.

Vehicle Mileage

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average annual mileage travelled per road vehicle (a) in the latest year for which figures are available, and (b) (i) five years, (ii) 10 years and (iii) 20 years before that year. [87013]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures are given in the table. The earliest date from which figures for vehicle numbers by body type is available is 1982.

Average annual distance travelled by vehicle type in thousand kilometres

Year	Cars and taxis	Motor-cycles, etc	Buses and coaches	Light vans	Goods vehicles
1982	14	4	49	18	32
1988	16	4	57	20	41
1993	15	4	62	20	43
1998	16	3	63	23	48

Traffic estimates are based on observations of traffic flows, matched with road length figures. Vehicle licence data are provided by DVLA.

Average mileage for each type of vehicle is derived by dividing the total annual mileage by the estimated number of vehicles of that type.

Fuel Tax Escalator

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the environmental effects of the fuel tax escalator; and if he will make a statement. [87570]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government regularly undertake assessments of the environmental impact of the fuel duty escalator, to inform the development of transport and environment policies. The latest estimate of the carbon savings from the escalator, published in the consultation document for the UK Climate Change Programme, stated that the escalator between 1996 and 2002 is expected to save 2–5 million tonnes of carbon in 2010. The impact of the escalator on air quality is also kept under review.

Mother Teresa's Funeral

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people travelled with him to Mother Teresa's funeral, excluding members of the Royal Family and their private staff. [88100]

Mr. Prescott: I represented my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at Mother Teresa's funeral, and was accompanied by two members of my staff. Because of the short notice available to make the arrangements, and the unavailability of scheduled flights, it was necessary to charter an aircraft for the journey to Calcutta. In order to ensure best value for money the flight was shared with five members of the Royal party.

Wal-Mart

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings Ministers in his Department have had with representatives of Wal-Mart; and what were the main subjects of discussion. [88099]

Mr. Caborn: Neither I nor any other Minister in the Department have met representatives of Wal-Mart.

GM Organisms

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to use his power under Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to vary existing genetically modified marketing consents issued thereunder to include a condition requiring post-release monitoring. [88159]

Mr. Meacher: There are no plans to vary existing consents issued in compliance with Part C of Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms (GMOs). Once a GM crop has Part C (marketing) consent under the Directive it applies across all member states. Individual member states cannot vary a consent unilaterally. Under the new arrangements agreed in the Environment Ministers' Council last December, all new applications for part C consent will have to include plans for post market monitoring. Government and industry, through SCIMAC (Supply Chain Initiative for Modified Agricultural Crops), have a voluntary agreement that for consents already granted or currently under consideration crops will be grown and managed in accordance with the SCIMAC Guidelines which include post-release monitoring.

London Underground

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies into passenger levels on the London Underground have been commissioned by his Department since 1 May 1997. [88431]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground makes studies of both existing and future passenger demand on a regular basis. The results of these studies are reported to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies have been carried out into the practical effects of the closure of the London Underground Circle Line between Gloucester Road and High Street Kensington stations from 12 June to 15 August. [88430]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Before engineering works began between Gloucester Road and High Street Kensington, London Underground made a full Hazard and Operability study into the line closure and the proposed changes to train and station operations. This study forecast the impact on passenger flows across London's public transport system and also assessed the probable effect on congestion levels and waiting times.

Graveyards

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the planning regulations relating to the sale of graveyards; and if he will make a statement. [88450]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no planning provisions which apply specifically to a proposed disposal of a graveyard, although a local authority may need a disposal consent in certain circumstances, for example to dispose of the land for less than the best consideration that can reasonably be obtained. A disused burial ground, which is no longer used for human interment, falls within the definition of open space for the purposes of local government and town and country planning powers. A local authority proposing to sell or otherwise dispose of or appropriate open space land must advertise the proposal and consider any objections. The disturbance of buried human remains normally requires a licence from the Home Office or, in relation to consecrated ground, a Faculty from the Bishop. Planning permission would normally be required for the carrying out of any development of land. We have no plans to review the present planning controls relating to the sale of graveyards.

Westminster Tube Station

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the construction work on Westminster tube station will be completed. [88444]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground expect to complete the construction work on Westminster tube station in late autumn this year.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list in respect of those properties which have been acquired in the past by his Department in relation to the Birmingham Northern Relief Road (a) those which he intends to dispose of because he no longer needs them in relation to the road and (b) the acquisition price of each such property and the price at which each such property has been placed on the market; [89119]

(2) if he will list in respect of those properties which have been acquired in the past by his Department in relation to the Birmingham Northern Relief Road (a) those which have been disposed of by him because he considers he no longer needs them in relation to the road and (b) the acquisition price and the money received on disposal in relation to each such property. [89129]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to reply to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 30 June 1999:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent questions about properties that have been bought and sold in relation to the Birmingham Northern Relief Road (BNRR).

I am afraid I am unable to provide the information in the form that you have requested. To list properties and prices would make public the amounts that private individuals have received or paid. I am sure you agree that such information should remain confidential.

The Agency has purchased 24 properties in connection with the BNRR that have since been sold. The total purchase price was £2.105m and the amount received on disposal of these same properties was £1.741m.

A further 5 properties, purchased at a total cost of £415,250, have been identified as surplus to requirements. Two of these are under offer at a total price of £135,000. The remaining properties have yet to be valued. We expect other properties to be declared surplus as the scheme progresses.

These figures relate to both the former publicly funded road and the privately financed Midland Expressway Ltd scheme. They include discretionary purchases (that is properties seriously affected by but not required for the road) as well as statutory blight purchases.

Waste Strategy

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in developing a waste strategy for England and Wales. [89296]

Mr. Meacher: Consultation responses to "Less Waste: More Value" last year were overwhelmingly supportive of the vision set out in that document which we have now developed into a blueprint for a more sustainable, integrated waste management system for England and Wales.

This blueprint is described in "A Way with Waste: A Draft Waste Strategy for England and Wales" which is published today for further public consultation. "A Way with Waste" makes clear that a step change is needed in the way we think about and manage our waste which applies equally to municipal and industrial waste. We need substantial increases to both recycling and energy recovery if we are to meet the challenges of sustainable development and of the European Directive on the landfilling of waste's stringent targets for diverting waste from landfill.

We have therefore set two goals by 2010 of recovering 45 per cent. of municipal waste (by recycling, composting and incineration with energy or heat recovery) and of recycling or composting 30 per cent. of household waste. To do this we must meet, as soon as possible, the existing targets of 40 per cent. recovery and 25 per cent. recycling or composting. We aim to do this by 2005. Beyond 2010 we must do more. By 2015 we expect to recover value from two thirds of household waste, half of this by recycling or composting.

We need to develop stronger markets for recyclate. The Government set up a Market Development Group to look at this and its report and recommendations are published for comment today alongside the draft strategy. Some of its recommendations are for Government and we will be addressing them with vigour, seeking further views as necessary. Some are for other bodies whom the Government calls on to address these proposals with same degree of energy.

It will of course be for the National Assembly for Wales to decide how to take forward this draft strategy, and the responses to the consultation on it, to produce a final strategy for Wales.

Tree Planting

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if there will be specific mechanisms proposed in the Urban White Paper to encourage the planting of trees in urban areas. [88807]

Mr. Meale: The Urban White Paper will look at ways of improving the quality of life for people in our towns and cities. Urban greening, including the contribution of trees, will be an important part of this.

The Government already acknowledge the important role of trees in urban regeneration by sponsoring a range of programmes which involve tree planting as part of a wider strategy to improve the urban environment. These include the Community Forest programme, the National Forest and others under the Single Regeneration Budget.

We also support the work of the National Urban Forestry Unit. They have shown that, by using simple, low-cost techniques urban forestry can help to improve the environment in a practical way and make trees a more significant feature of the urban landscape.

Local Authority Finance

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department makes of previous spending patterns by individual local authorities in its calculations of total standard spending for that authority. [89023]

Mr. Meale: The formula for Standard Spending Assessments is built up from formulae relating to blocks of services. Those formulae are, in many cases, based on statistical analysis of the variations between authorities in spending on those services.

Oil and Fat Waste

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 22 June 1999, Official Report, column 334, on oil and fat waste, what factors underlay his decision not to commission research. [89007]

Mr. Meale: There are statutory provisions to ensure that sewerage undertakers can monitor, control, restrict and deal with discharges into public sewers. The Department is not aware of any significant problems associated with these problems.

Sports Clubs (Rate Relief)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the cost of allowing mandatory rate relief to voluntary sports clubs. [88579]

Mr. Meale: The Central Council of Physical Recreation estimate that there are 150,000 voluntary sports clubs affiliated to the national governing bodies of sport in the United Kingdom. However, we do not hold centrally information on the number of clubs subject to non-domestic rates, their rateable values or their rates bills reflecting discretionary rate relief awarded by local authorities. Therefore, we cannot make a reasonable estimate of the cost of allowing mandatory rate relief to voluntary sports clubs.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88469]

The Attorney-General: No representative of my Department has attended any European Community Working Group during the last 12 months.

15. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions she has had with members of the Irish Government concerning the implementation of the Good Friday agreement. [87729]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have regular contact with representatives of the Irish Government concerning the implementation of the Good Friday Agreement. I was in Dublin just a week ago with Ministers and, since Monday, I have been in constant contact in the talks in Belfast—including over breakfast this morning.

23. Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on international support for the peace process in Northern Ireland. [87738]

25. Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on international support for the peace process in Northern Ireland. [87740]

Mr. Ingram: International support, both economic and political, has been overwhelming. It is a generous sign of growing international confidence in the people of Northern Ireland and what they have achieved over the last decade.

The Government will continue to work to seek the implementation of the Good Friday Agreement on which so much of that support is based.

Residential Colleges (Student Funding)

9. Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons her Department is proposing to discontinue funding students from Northern Ireland attending adult residential colleges in Great Britain. [87723]

Mr. McFall: The Government will invest an additional £47.5 million over the next three years in Lifelong Learning in Northern Ireland. This will provide some 10,000 additional student places in further and higher education, together with continued support for access courses to higher education provided by local colleges. To make this possible, reductions in some programmes, including the very few adult education bursaries in Great Britain, were inevitable.

Equality Commission

13. Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made on the establishment of an Equality Commission in Northern Ireland. [87727]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today, Official Report, column 331 to my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw).

Paramilitary Organisations (Crime)

16. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the number of crimes attributed to paramilitary organisations committed in Northern Ireland in 1999. [87731]

Mr. Ingram: Statistics for crimes believed to be attributed to paramilitary organisations are collated under the headings in the following table. These show the number of incidents recorded as being of paramilitary style during the period 1 January to 18 June 1999. This figure is not exhaustive, however, and is subject to amendment.

	Number
Paramilitary style incidents
Deaths	5
Shootings	66

Casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks
Shootings	43
Assaults	81

Note:
These figures are subject to amendment

28. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of when decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives will begin. [87743]

Mr. Ingram: I have welcomed the start to decommissioning made by the LVF on 18 December last. The Decommissioning Commission continues its vital work. It is time for all groups to play their part in the full implementation of the Good Friday Agreement; they should start to decommission now.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Pay Settlement)

19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of this year's police pay settlement on RUC neighbourhood policing and other commitments. [87734]

Mr. Ingram: The Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998 gives the responsibility for, and control of, all the resources required to deliver a policing service to the Chief Constable. It is for him, in conjunction with the Police Authority, to decide upon priorities and allocate resources in line with the Policing Plan. One of the objectives of this is to work in partnership with local communities and other agencies, to improve the quality of service delivered by the police to all the people of Northern Ireland.

Drumcree Parade

20. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to deal with the disputed parade planned at Drumcree. [87735]

29. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for dealing with the parade at Drumcree. [87744]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today, Official Report, column 332, to my hon. Friend the Member for Cleethorpes (Shona McIsaac).

Long-term Unemployment

21. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the current level of long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland. [87736]

Mr. Ingram: Latest estimates from the Labour Force Survey for the period February to April 1999 show that approximately 29,000 persons in Northern Ireland have been unemployed for one year or more. This represents 53 per cent. of the total unemployed and 3.9 per cent. of the workforce.

22. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to tackle long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland. [87737]

Mr. McFall: New Deal 25+ will provide up to 30,000 developmental placements over 18 months for eligible long-term unemployed. From 1 August 1999, Worktrack will provide 2,100 places annually for those not eligible to join the various New Deals.

New Deal for young people seeks to prevent young people becoming long-term unemployed.

Northern Ireland (Location of Victims' Remains) Act 1999

24. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial provision she has made to support the search for victims' bodies under the Northern Ireland (Location of Victims' Remains) Act 1999. [87739]

Mr. Ingram: Section 2 of the Northern Ireland (Location of Victims' Remains) Act provides that > "the Secretary of State may make payments to the Commission or to members of the Commission; and provide for the Commission such premises and facilities, and the services of such staff, as he thinks appropriate".

Devolution

26. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the prospects for devolved Government in Northern Ireland. [87741]

27. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the prospects for the establishment of a cross-community Executive to govern Northern Ireland. [87742]

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the prospects for devolved Government in Northern Ireland. [87726]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) and Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) and to the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor), today, Official Report, column 334-35.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to involve Northern Ireland Assembly Members in decision making in Northern Ireland. [87725]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Intensive discussions are currently taking place between all of the parties represented in the Assembly and the British and Irish Governments to agree a way forward to complete the implementation of the Good Friday Agreement including devolving power to the Northern Ireland Assembly. Until devolution takes place, Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office will continue to consult the Northern Ireland political parties in the normal way about any decisions they take.

RUC (Portadown)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of (a) assault and (b) affray occurred in the Thomas Street and Market Street/Woodhouse Street area of Portadown town centre between 1 April 1996 and 27 April 1997; and how many arrests were made. [85499]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC have advised that there were three recordable offences of assault in this area between the dates in question. Of these, two were assault occasioning actual bodily harm, one was grievous bodily harm. One person was arrested in each case. There were no recorded offences of affray.

Chief Constable

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to lay before each House the annual report for 1998 of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [89357]

Marjorie Mowlam: Copies of the Chief Constable's annual report for 1998 have today been placed in the Library. It is a general report on the carrying out of the RUC of their functions during 1998 which is submitted to the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and also to me for laying before Parliament in accordance with Sections 48 and 49 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998.

Security Arrangements

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards the normalisation of security arrangements in Northern Ireland. [87730]

Mr. Ingram: Since the Good Friday Agreement, routine military patrolling has been reduced by almost two thirds. Since the start of the year, there have been under 15,000 service personnel on operational duties in Northern Ireland, fewer than at any time since 1970, although there may be some short term increases over the summer period. Military installations have been closed and some demolished.

We are committed to as early a return as possible to normal security arrangements, consistent with the level of threat.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sentencing

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made to implement sections 80 and 81 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [89576]

Mr. Straw: Section 80 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 places a duty on the Court of Appeal to consider producing or revising sentencing guidelines when a suitable case arises.

Section 81 of the Act establishes a new Sentencing Advisory Panel which must be consulted by the Court whenever it decides that guidelines are necessary. The Panel may also propose that the Court frame or revise guidelines and I may direct it to do so.

Both sections come into force on 1 July 1999.

The Lord Chancellor will appoint the following members to the Panel:

Professor Martin Wasik (Chairman)

Professor Andrew Ashworth

Pamela Brown

Dr. Michael Chan

Anne Fuller

Heather Harker

Professor Frances Heidensohn

Peter Jones

David Mallen

Judge Michael Mettyear

Sir Richard Tilt.

Mr. Straw: The Metropolitan Police are responsible for the purchase and supply of the lead security vehicle used for the protection of the Prime Minister. The vehicle currently used is a Land Rover Discovery.

Police Manpower

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish figures for each police authority in England and Wales setting out (a) the percentage changes in their budget and (b) the numbers of police officers in the force between 1 April 1998 and 31 March 1999. [89577]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is set out in the table. The information on changes in police numbers is based on provisional strength figures at March 1999 provided by forces.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 May 1999, Official Report, column 296, concerning police manpower, when he intends to publish figures for the number of police officers, per force and in total, on 31 March; and if he will make a statement. [88192]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures are provisional and subject to validation.

Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force area, within the resources available to them. The Home Secretary no longer has any power to set entitlements of forces.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what preparations are being made by the UK Passport Agency for the processing of criminal record checks; and if he will make a statement. [88167]

Mr. Boateng: The Passport Agency has set up a team in Merseyside to manage the introduction of the Criminal Records Bureau.

Detailed planning is under way with the aim of commencing operations on a phased basis.

Procurement of accommodation and Information Technology services is now under way by open competition and advertisements have been placed in the Open Journal of the European Community (OJEC).

Road Safety

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place between his Department and the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for linking the aims and objectives for the Police Service with the National Road Safety Strategy. [88315]

Mr. Straw: The over-arching aims and objectives for police forces in England and Wales which were published last year include an objective of contributing to improving road safety and the reduction of casualties. That links with the police's aim to promote safety and reduce disorder. The performance measures related to the new duty of best value are likely to include performance measures in relation to this area of policing. These measures are to be agreed following a period of consultation over the summer. The new National Road Safety Strategy and casualty reduction targets for 2010 are being developed by the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) in close consultation with officials in my Department and with representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers' Traffic Committee. DETR expect to be able to publish the strategy and targets in the autumn.

Subversion

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral answer of 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 783, what the role of F Branch of the Security Service formerly dealing with subversion currently is; what proportion of its work relates to the pensions of former F Branch employees; if the threat assessment set out on page 12 of the Home Office publication of 1998, "MI5 The Security Service", with particular reference to subversion, still applies; and if the statement on page 19 that there are no investigations into subversion is still valid. [88224]

Mr. Straw: The 1998 booklet "MI5 The Security Service" contains as much information as it is possible to disclose on this subject. The information which it contains on Security Service investigations of subversion remains valid. It would not be in the public interest to provide further details of the kind requested.

Young Offenders

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will survey those persons admitted to young offenders' institutions over the next three calendar months to establish how many and which had been members of uniformed youth organisations; for what duration; and what percentage of admissions this represents. [88420]

Mr. George Howarth: No. The Government believe that the 'what works' and related research provides a reliable basis for developing ways to tackle offending by young people and have no plans to commission a survey of this nature.

However, I have set up some focus groups with young offenders to discuss in more general terms their backgrounds, experience of the criminal justice system, their perceptions of custody and their plans for the future. A draft report has been received and the final report should be made available to me very shortly.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prison drug tests proved positive in (a) drug-free wings and (b) other wings in the latest period for which figures are available. [88306]

Mr. George Howarth: The proportion of random mandatory drug tests that proved positive for the period 1998–99 was 18.3 per cent. which is 1.7 per cent. less than the target of 20 per cent. set for the year. This can be compared with the previous years' figures of 24.4 per cent. positive in 1996–97 and 20.8 per cent. in 1997–98. Figures for drug testing results from voluntary testing units are not collated centrally.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) arrests have been made on suspicion of smuggling drugs into prison, (b) prosecutions have been brought and (c) convictions have been obtained in the most recent period for which figures are available. [88303]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 23 June 1999, Official Report, column 379.

Means Assessments (Convicted Criminals)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review court procedures for conducting means assessments prior to sentencing of convicted criminals. [R] [87556]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Courts are required by law to inquire into the financial circumstances of a convicted offender before fixing the amount of any fine. Means assessments are also currently carried out in criminal cases before the grant of legal aid.

A case is pending before the European Court of Human Rights questioning the role of the Justices' Clerk in conducting means inquiries in magistrates courts. Once the outcome of the case is known the Government will consider what action, if any, needs to be taken.

The Access to Justice Bill includes a proposal to transfer from the Justices' Clerk to the Justices' Chief Executive the administrative responsibility for collecting fines. The Bill also proposes the abolition of means assessments before the granting of legal aid and the introduction of a power at the end of a case for the higher courts to order defendants to meet some or all of the defence costs. There will be power to assess the defendant's means before any such order is made.

The Government have no other plans to review court procedures in this area.

Public Safety Radio Communications Project

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what progress is being made with respect to the Public Safety Radio Communications Project; and if he will make a statement; [88605]

(2) what funding arrangements will be put in place for the Public Safety Radio Communications Project. [88606]

Mr. Boateng: The Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), a Home Office Non-Departmental Public Body, is managing the Public Safety Radio Communications Project (PSRCP). This is a major Public Private Partnership project designed to replace the police service's existing radio communications systems with a modern national infrastructure delivered under a service provision contract. The Service Provider will design, build, fund and own the infrastructure and individual police forces will contract to take a range of core (mandatory) and menu (optional) services for anticipated contract periods of 15 years.

A Project Definition Study has been completed and negotiations on price and contractual terms are now in progress with British Telecommunications as the candidate Service Provider. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the Association of Police Authorities (APA) are being kept fully briefed of progress. When negotiations are concluded, a formal business case will shortly be put to Ministers, ACPO and the APA, for a decision on its acceptance.

Over the next three years the police service will receive an additional £1.24 billion in central government funding. It is a matter for each police authority to set their budget and for each chief constable to determine how to use the resources that are available. The scope for additional funding for PSRCP is under consideration.

Released Prisoners

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what programmes there are to help prisoners find accommodation on their release. [88675]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison and Probation Services work closely together to help prisoners released on licence to maintain or secure appropriate accommodation. For prisoners not subject to statutory supervision there are a number of sources of advice and guidance. These include prison officers trained by "National Association for Care and Resettlement of Offenders", accommodation specialists from the probation service and independent organisations.

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department has done to identify debt problems affecting prisoners that could increase the likelihood of an individual re-offending, if not dealt with before the prisoner's release. [88672]

Mr. George Howarth: It is recognised that financial considerations can be related to the risk of re-offending in some cases. While no specific programme is in place to identify problems of debt, it is a factor which is taken into account in wider assessments for sentence planning and in the provision of advice and information.

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what work is being done in the Prison Service to ensure that a resettlement service is provided for each prisoner. [88673]

Mr. George Howarth: Adult prisoners with six months or more to serve and young offenders serving one month or more are subject to a system of sentence planning to determine what can be done during their time in custody and on licence to contribute to successful release. The Prison Service invests annually in the "National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders" prison link unit, providing £226,000 for 1999–2000, to train prison officers to provide advice and information on resettlement issues, and for specially trained staff to provide pre-release courses.

Individual prisons liaise with probation services and other statutory and independent organisations, to provide resettlement services appropriate to local circumstances.

The Government have also invested nearly £3.5 million in piloting Welfare to Work in 11 prison establishments. In the 12 months the pilot has been in operation, over 2,500 young prisoners have joined, and over 1,700 have completed, the programme.

However, the Government recognise that there may be a particular difficulty in providing effective resettlement advice and support for prisoners serving sentences of less than a year. Under the Crime Reduction Programme, pilots are therefore to be established in seven areas to test out and evaluate new ways of meeting the resettlement needs of short term prisoners.

Firearms

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take measures to ensure that information as to whether firearms used in crime are legally or illegally held is provided by the police; and if he will publish this information. [88706]

Mr. Boateng: Information as to whether firearms used in crime are legally or illegally held is not published in the annual Criminal Statistics because, although the police are asked for this information, in practice they are only able to provide it in some six per cent. of cases. The information is thus not complete enough at present to make statistical analysis or publication worthwhile. The Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate is considering how to improve the quality of this data.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences involving pistols led to charges in the 12 months up to 1 October 1997 and in the 12 months thereafter. [88694]

Mr. Boateng: No information is kept centrally on the number of offences involving firearms that lead to charges.

The readily available information relates to notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales in which handguns were reported to have been used. Annual figures are contained in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the cost to date of paying compensation to firearms' owners; [88695]

(2) how many people have been charged for failing to surrender .22 pistols; [88692]

(3) what has been the cost to date of processing claims for firearms compensation; [88696]

(4) how many firearms have been surrendered following the ban on .22 pistols; [88691]

(5) how long, on average, it has taken for compensation to be paid for surrendered firearms. [88693]

Mr. Boateng: Payments under options A and B of the compensation schemes for large and small-calibre handguns have been made in an average of 21 weeks, and in an average of 63 weeks under option C of the schemes. A total of £60.3 million has been paid in compensation to individual firearm certificate holders. The administration costs of the compensation scheme total £4.6 million. In addition, a total of £3.8 million was provided to police forces in England, Wales and Scotland to help meet their costs in handling the surrender exercise.

A total of 19,183 small-calibre pistols were surrendered to the police in England, Wales and Scotland during February 1998 following the passage of the Firearms (Amendment) (No 2) Act 1997. This is in addition to the 26,371 small-calibre pistols surrendered voluntarily under the Government's ex gratia payment scheme, which began in July 1997. Information on the number of persons charged for failing to surrender or otherwise lawfully dispose of .22 pistols was not collected centrally.

Accident Reports (Government Departments)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds it is proposed that accident reports from Government Departments will be exempt from publication under the draft Freedom of Information Bill. [88725]

Mr. Straw: The exemption was considered necessary to avoid the possibility of compromising future legal proceedings by giving a right of access to such information. The Bill as drafted requires the authority holding information falling within this class to consider disclosing it, pursuant to clause 14, in the exercise of any discretion it may have to do so. Our view was that it was appropriate to place responsibility for considering the disclosure of such information on the authority concerned.

When I appeared before the Select Committee on Public Administration on 22 June 1999, I accepted that there were arguments in favour of extending rights in this area and I undertook to reconsider the scope of this exemption.

Seat Belts

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department has given police forces about enforcing the wearing of car seat belts by children; and if he will make a statement. [88726]

Mr. Boateng: None. The enforcement of road traffic law is an operational matter for chief officers of police.

European Council (Tampere)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 91, concerning the topics to be raised by the special European Council meeting at Tampere, Finland, concerning co-ordination of judicial and home affairs, if he will define the phrase, European Judicial Area, and provide reference to the relevant Treaty articles providing a basis for its use. [88677]

Mr. Straw: Following the conclusions of the Vienna European Council, which asked for > "particular attention to be paid to the creation of a European Judicial Area, in accordance with the Treaty of Amsterdam", the Government understands the phrase "European Judicial Area" as referring principally to closer judicial co-operation in criminal and civil matters between the Member States. The relevant Treaty Articles are Article 65 of the European Community Treaty, and 29, 31 and 32 of the Treaty on European Union.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 91, concerning the agenda items and related documents to be discussed at the additional European Council to be held in Tampere, Finland, in October, to consider the European Judicial Area, what criteria were used to determine which documents are inappropriate for publication; and what committees of either House of Parliament will be able to consider those published prior to that council meeting. [88690]

Mr. Straw: As I indicated in my reply on 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 91, the documents to be submitted to the European Council will not be known until shortly before the meeting. When they are received they will be subject to the provisions relating to deposit for Parliamentary scrutiny as laid down in paragraph 127(1) of House of Commons Standing Order No. 143. Documents deposited under these provisions are sent to the European Scrutiny Committee and to the European Communities Committee of the House of Lords. Copies are also sent to the Home Affairs Select Committee.

Article 36 Committee

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 89, concerning the duties and meetings of the Article 36 Committee of the Home and Justice Ministerial Committee, what means he intends to adopt concerning communicating to Parliament its conclusions and recommendations prior to their consideration and decision by the Home Affairs Ministerial Council. [88664]

Mr. Straw: As I informed my hon. Friend in my reply of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 259, it was not the general practice of the Government to report to Parliament on the business of the K4 Committee. This policy will continue to apply to the work of the Article 36 Committee. The conclusions and recommendations of that Committee are considered by the Council, and a report of the Council's proceedings is of course made to Parliament.

City of London (Protection)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to increase the protection of workers in the City of London from violent demonstrators. [88440]

Mr. Boateng: It is vital that the people who work in the City are allowed to go about their business without fear of harassment or intimidation. It is an operational matter for the police service to ensure that public order is maintained and that the public is protected from disorderly or violent conduct. The Government will liaise closely with the City of London Police, and will consider any changes to policy or practice which the police service indicate would assist them in preventing further disruption.

PAVA Incapacitant Spray

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research is being conducted by the Police Scientific Development Branch into the incapacitant spray PAVA; what is the aim of this research; for what reason it has been started; when this research began; when it is expected to end; and if the results of this research will be published. [88439]

Mr. Boateng: Some research has been commissioned privately by Hertfordshire Constabulary into the use of Pelargonic Acid Vanillylamide (PAVA) as a potential incapacitant spray. The Police Scientific Development Branch (PSDB) are not conducting any research into PAVA at present. Discussions have been held with Hertfordshire Constabulary to assess the research they have carried out to date and to assess what still needs to be done before PAVA could be considered for use in the United Kingdom. No decision has yet been taken on the future involvement of PSDB in any further research.

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 371, concerning the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998, when he intends to announce the appointment of an independent reviewer of those provisions of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 which were not incorporated into the Prevention of Terrorism (Termporary Provisions) Act 1989; when the first review will take place; and if he will make a statement. [88809]

Mr. Straw: Arrangements are currently in hand to identify potential candidates for this appointment. We hope to be able to make an announcement shortly. The reviewer will, on taking up post, review the operation of sections 5–7 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 since they came into force in September 1998.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were received from (a) Serbia and (b) Colombia in 1998; and how many of the applications (i) were agreed, (ii) were refused and (iii) await decision; and if he will make a statement. [88835]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. I regret that it is not possible, without involving disproportionate cost, to separately identify Serbians within the statistics held on nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Applications [1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, and initial decisions [2,3] for nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Columbia, 1998

Criminal Record Bureau

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the structure of application fees for the Criminal Record Bureau does not discourage volunteering. [88850]

Mr. Boateng: The Criminal Record Bureau will be run on a full cost recovery basis and the cost of the fees for certificates from the Bureau will be kept to the minimum necessary to recoup costs. All applicants will be treated equally.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 4 May 1999, Official Report, column 337, what were the names of the two individuals from the US Government whom he met on 17 March. [84343]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 21 May 1999]: My right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State met Stuart Eizenstadt, Under Secretary of State for Economic, Business and Agricultural Affairs at the US Department of State and Ambassador Peter Scher, US Special Trade Negotiator.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what dates special advisers from his Department have travelled in an official capacity to the United States since 2 May 1997; what were the names of the special advisers; and if they accompanied ministers. [84325]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 21 May 1999]: One special adviser travelled to the United States with my predecessor on 15–19 March 1999. In accordance with convention, the name of the special adviser has not been given.

A9 (Strathsteven)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps (a) have been taken and (b) are planned following the accident investigation and prevention study by the National Roads Directorate to improve road safety on the A9 to Strathsteven, Brora. [89089]

Mr. Macdonald: (a) Works to strengthen the edge of the carriageway, boundary wall and verge are currently being undertaken. (b) An Accident Investigation and Prevention study is to be commissioned to identify any appropriate low cost accident prevention measures for this location. Any measures agreed will be implemented during this financial year, providing sufficient funds are available.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those Forestry Commission land sites currently on the market in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales indicating for each proposed sale (i) the total area, (ii) location, (iii) type of land, (iv) length of time on the market and (v) the provisions for securing continuing public access. [87444]

Mr. Macdonald: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its Chief Executive, Dr. Bob McIntosh, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 30 June 1999:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Question about Forestry Commission land that is currently on the market.

I enclose a table which gives the information you have requested.

The table does not include negotiated sales, such as sales of houses and agricultural land to sitting tenants or sales of land to conservation bodies through our sponsorship arrangements, as these are not available on the open market.

I hope that this is helpful.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households in Scotland would meet the eligibility criteria for the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme if it were to be applied in Scotland. [88152]

Dr. Reid: The information is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Pollok Centre, Glasgow

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total rateable value of the Pollok Centre in Glasgow; how much was paid in rates by the centre during the last financial year; and how much and what percentage of the total raised was made available to Glasgow City Council. [88160]

Mr. Macdonald: Assuming full occupation, the total rateable value of the Pollok Centre is £2,374,550, of which almost £1.2 million was paid in rates by the centre in the last financial year. This amount will be included in Glasgow's contribution to the Non-Domestic Rates Pool for 1998–99. Each council's share of Aggregate External Finance (AEF) is calculated according to relative spending need or assessed by Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE). Once specific grants have been top-sliced the balance of the AEF share is made up of two component Non-Domestic Rates Income (NDRI) and Revenu Support Grant (RSG). NDRI is distributed pro-rata t population and the balance then becomes the council' RSG.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State fo Scotland on what date his Department was first informe that Parts IV A and IV B of the Prevention of Terrorisn (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer i force. [8879

Dr. Reid [holding answer 28 June 1999]: M Department was advised on 21 June that these provision were no longer in force.

Vacant Land

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of Stat for Scotland what measures the Government will take t implement the recommendations of the Scottish Offic Pieda Study, Towards a Strategy for Vacant Land, th (a) dereliction considered to have adverse environmenta effects should be dealt with by 2010 and (b) no loc authority should have more than 0.5 per cent. vacant lan by 2010; and if he will make a statement. [8902

Dr. Reid: The two specific recommendations cited from Pieda's report to the Scottish Office have not been adopted as targets. The Government have, however, allocated £3 million a year to bring vacant and derelict land in Glasgow up to a standard suitable for housing. In addition remediation of contaminated land will be addressed by Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which it is planned will be brought into force by the end of 1999. A number of National Planning Policy Guidelines also make clear to planning authorities that priority should be given to the re-use of vacant and derelict land. The information in the Scottish Vacant and Derelict Land Survey has been improved to record the development potential of sites and to enable planning authorities to prioritise sites for re-use.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Opencast Coal

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been made to local authorities for the development of opencast coal over the past 12 months; and how many have been approved. [R] [88943]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Information on planning applications made to and approved by local authorities in respect of open-cast coal developments is not held centrally. General information on planning statistics is collected by the Scottish Office Development Department. However, there is no detailed provision for authorities to inform the Department of applications made for opencast coal developments unless the proposal falls within the scope of the Town and Country Planning (Notification of Applications) (Scotland) Direction 1997.

Belgian Food Products

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from whom information about the contamination of Belgian food products was first received by his officials. [88951]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Scottish Office officials initially received this information from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when (a) he and (b) his officials were informed of the contamination of Belgian food products. [88950]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 29 June 1999]: My right hon. Friend first learned of the contamination of Belgian food products on 3 June 1999. Scottish Office officials first learned of this problem on 1 June 1999.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

School Sports Co-ordinators

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how the sports co-ordinators for schools will be apportioned (a) by individul sport, (b) by school sector and (c) in other ways; and if they will include co-ordinators for swimming events. [88183]

Mr. Banks: Sport England are currently working up detailed plans for the role the Co-ordinators will play. However, it is not envisaged that Co-ordinators will be apportioned by individual sport, but play a generic role covering all sports, including swimming. They will be based in secondary schools, with the target being up to 600 Active Schools Co-ordinators operating in 1,000 secondary schools and associated primary schools over the next 10 years.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the announcement of the appointment of school sports co-ordinators was first made; and by whom. [88453]

Mr. Banks: The announcement of the appointment of Active Schools Co-ordinators was first made in Sport England's Lottery Strategy in May. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced that he had written to Sport England to ensure that arranging competitive fixtures between schools was a key part of the Co-ordinators' job description.

Sports Participation (Asian Community)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department is taking to encourage participation by and representation of the Asian community at national level in cricket, badminton, hockey and football. [88676]

Mr. Banks: Sport can play a major role in ridding society of racism, especially given the positive influence it can have on young people. It is an issue which impacts on all sports and must be tackled by them.

Sport England, in conjunction with the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE), has established a Racial Equality Advisory Group to work with all sports national governing bodies to encourage racial equality in sport. The group meets on a regular basis and comprises representatives from a variety of agencies. The Group examines issues relating to ethnic minorities in sport, and advises Sport England to ensure that its policies offer equal opportunities to all people, irrespective of their ethnic background.

Furthermore, all recipients of grant-in-aid must agree to have all facilities, courses and events open to the whole community. Similar criteria are also used in assessing applications for grants from the Lottery Sports Fund.

Much has been done to address the problems of racism in football. I am pleased to acknowledge the good work undertaken by the Commission for Racial Equality and the Professional Footballers Association, who were involved in the Lets Kick Racism Out of Football campaign. The Football Task Force Report on Racism in Football, produced earlier this year, has also been very well received alongside initiatives such as Kick it Out and Show Racism the Red Card.

I want to ensure that the lessons and proposals highlighted in that report are extended to other sports. To this end I have recently written to the governing bodies of five major sports as a first step asking how they are going about addressing any problems within their sports. I intend to call a meeting with those governing bodies, the Commission for Racial Equality and the Local Government Association to root out this problem.

Youth Sports Schemes

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to ensure that equal opportunities are offered to girls and boys in youth sports schemes funded or promoted by the Government. [88593]

Mr. Banks: The Government fund Sports England to develop programmes for young people and they do this through their Active Schools programme. A key principle of the programme is that every child—having due regard for differences in ability, gender and background—should benefit from the programme.

Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much was spent per head of population on tourism in England in the last year for which figures are available. [88600]

Janet Anderson: The total amount spent in England in 1997 by tourists who stayed at least one night is estimated at £21.7 billion, equivalent to £440 per head of the population. Including the spending during tourism day visits would almost double these amounts.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his expenditure plans for tourism for the next three years. [88813]

Janet Anderson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced his expenditure plans for tourism over the next three years on 14 December 1998. They include an extra £5 million over three years for the British Tourist Authority and an extra £4 million to transform the English Tourist Board into a new strategic body, the English Tourism Council (ETC). The launch of the ETC heralds new regional funding arrangements enabling a greater proportion of funds to be provided direct to Regional Tourist Boards to provide extra support for tourism in the regions of England.

Sports Sites

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the accuracy of the National Register of Sports Sites. [88462]

Mr. Banks: The proposals for a national register of Recreational Land were originally put forward during the preparation of The Playing Pitch Strategy by the GB Sports Council, the National Playing Fields Association and the Central Council for Physical Recreation in 1989. The objectives of the Register from the outset were to monitor change in the recreational land resource; to assist in policy development at the local and national level; and to provide information to the public. An independent evaluation of the Register 1994 found a number of shortcomings with the data. These shortcomings were due to a number of factors, including the voluntary nature of the project, with owners and managers of sites under no obligation to provide data, and many refusing to co-operate.

A review of the effectiveness of the Register in 1998 indicated that the likelihood of achieving and maintaining a comprehensive, accurate, up-to-date national inventory of playing pitches was remote. Sport England, with the support of the DCMS, the National Playing Fields Association and the Central Council for Physical Recreation, is currently working with local authorities on a suitable model of the Register which can be used by local authorities to undertake assessments of playing field need and provision in their area.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the criteria are for the funding of sports sites through the allocation of National Lottery money. [88463]

Mr. Banks: Sport England is the statutory distributor of Lottery funding for sport in England. It dispenses these funds according to its own published criteria within a general policy framework agreed with the Government. The Council takes individual funding decisions based on a number of principles independently of Government.

Sport England has established stringent assessment criteria for applicants in which priority is given to those projects which demonstrate a commitment to increasing active sporting participation within the community, particularly those members of the community who may previously have been under-represented, for example, people with disabilities, women and junior participants. Projects that demonstrate a well thought out, structured programme for achieving this and those which expand the choice of sports available to the community are more likely to receive support. Sport England reaches its award decisions after a thorough appraisal of the many different aspects of each proposal. These criteria are fully explained in an application pack that is made available to all potential applicants to the Sport England Lottery Fund. Copies of the pack have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Physical Training and Recreation Act 1937

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to amend the Physical Training and Recreation Act 1937. [88460]

Mr. Banks: I have announced that we will seek to amend the Physical Training and Recreation Act 1937 so that chess may become eligible for funding from the Sports Council. Primary legislation will be required and proposals to do so will be introduced when Parliamentary time allows.

Playing Fields

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of making the National Playing Fields Association a statutory consultee on playing fields development. [88461]

Mr. Banks: Any decision to include the National Playing Field Association as a statutory consultee on playing fields development is one for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. We have already introduced a number of measures to protect playing fields which require local education authorities, schools and developers to consider carefully the needs of school children and local communities for whom playing fields are a vital resource.

Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and myself are in the closest contact with Ministers at the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to monitor these arrangements, and we will consider any further action which may be needed.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of allowing mandatory rate relief to voluntary sports clubs. [88746]

Mr. Banks: The issue of mandatory rate relief is a matter primarily for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, though I take a close interest in the potential for developing grass roots sport.

We made a Manifesto commitment to review the current arrangements under which local authorities give business rate relief to non-profit-making sports clubs in England, Scotland and Wales. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will issue a consultation paper later in the year.

Private Sports Grounds

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications have been received to finance retention of private sports grounds with funds from the Sportsmatch programme; and if he will list them. [88745]

Mr. Banks: Sportsmatch, which is administered by the Institute of Sports Sponsorship, launched the Company Sports Facilities Initiative pilot scheme last year to encourage companies with sports facilities to open them to wider use by local communities and sports clubs. Discussions are in hand with potential company sponsors, but no applications have been received to date. The retention of private sports facilities is not eligible for Sportsmatch funding.

Activity Holidays (National Minimum Wage)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations his Department has made to the Department of Trade and Industry on the impact of the national minimum wage on activity holidays; and if he will publish them. [88454]

Janet Anderson: We have received a number of representations from the tourism and hospitality industry on the national minimum wage, including some from the activity holiday sector, which we have passed on to the Department of Trade and Industry. The industry had good and productive discussions during 1998–99 with the independent Low Pay Commission and the Government subsequently set the National Minimum Wage at the sensible level recommended by the Commission.

The Government have asked the Low Pay Commission to monitor and evaluate the impact of the introduction of the national minimum wage. The Commission will welcome views from tourism and hospitality operators on the impact the new legislation is having in practice.

English Tourism Council

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what legislative changes will be required to establish the English Tourism Council. [88452]

Janet Anderson: No legislation is needed at this stage. The Development of Tourism Act 1969 still applies. Following its launch on 19 July, the English Tourism Council will be the trading name for the English Tourist Board. The new name reflects the change in the body's remit and will be changed formally when a legislative opportunity arises.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to announce who has been appointed to be the (a) chairman and (b) chief executive of the new English Tourism Council. [89135]

Janet Anderson: We are announcing today that the chairman of the English Tourism Council is to be Alan Britten. He will take up the post on Monday 12 July. The appointment of a chief executive is a matter for the ETC.

Millennium Wheel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is (a) the cost and (b) the design life of the Millennium Wheel; and how long it is planned to remain at its County Hall location. [88838]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Ferris Wheel (London Eye) is an entirely privately funded project sponsored by British Airways; no application for funding has been made to any Government Department or Agency. Temporary planning permission was granted for a period of five years and any plan to extend this period would have to be made through my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what is his Department's estimate of the cost of transport projects involved in the redevelopment of Wembley Stadium as the centrepiece for a bid to host the Olympic Games; [89139]

(2) what is his Department's estimate of the total cost of the redevelopment of Wembley Stadium as the centrepiece for a bid to host the Olympic Games. [89133]

Mr. Banks: The British Olympic Association are currently undertaking feasibility studies involving Sport England, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Government Office for London on the key aspects of mounting a successful bid for a future Olympics. These cover environment, transport, Olympic village and sports facilities, including a stadium capable of staging the opening and closing ceremonies and athletics events. These working groups are expected to report in December with a full assessment of what is in place and what needs to be in place to bid for and stage the Olympic Games.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many current incapacity benefit recipients who first made their claim after April 1995 and who have been excluded from the transitional protection provided to former invalidity benefit claimants have an occupational pension; and, for those who receive an occupational pension, what is the average weekly pension payment. [87588]

Mr. Bayley: When Incapacity Benefit was introduced, transitional arrangements allowed those already in receipt of Invalidity Benefit to continue to receive their previous rate of benefit. This is standard procedure following a major change in Social Security legislation.

It is not possible to provide figures for the occupational pension income of Incapacity Benefit recipients whose claims began after April 1995. Such information as is available is in the table. The table shows levels of occupational and personal pensions for all current Incapacity Benefit recipients. No existing Incapacity Benefit recipient will be affected at the point of change by the proposal to take some account of occupational and personal pensions over £50 a week.

Levels of occupational and personal pensions for Incapacity Benefit recipients 1996–97

Occupational and personal pension income (£ per week)	Number of recipients
0	1,120,000
less than £25	120,000
£25 to £49.99	110,000
£50 to £74.99	110,000
£75 to £99.99	90,000
£100 to £124.99	40,000
£125 to £149.99	40,000
£150 to £199.99	50,000
£200 or more	40,000
All IB recipients	1,710,000

Notes:
1. The average gross occupational and personal pension income for Incapacity Benefit recipients with non-State pension incomes in 1996–97 was £85 per week.
2. All estimates are based on data from the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey and are in gross 1996–97 prices.
3. Estimates are based on sample counts that have been adjusted for non-response.
4. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response.

Income Support

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the most recent figures showing how many people are on Income Support in the age ranges (i) 0 to 8, (ii) 18 to 24, (iii) 25 to 50, (iv) 50 to 65, (v) 65 to 85 and (vi) 85 years and over in each of the regions covered by the new regional development agencies. 1. Age ranges provided in the tables do not exactly match those requested as these had missing ranges and overlapping boundaries. In addition, sample sizes for the highest age range are too small to support reliable estimates of the statistics in question. Therefore, age ranges which are as close as possible to those requested have been used.

2. The estimates are based on sample counts that have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors that control for region, Council Tax Band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response.

3. All figures are provided in thousands and have been rounded to the nearest ten thousand.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made on the implementation of The Activities for Management of Life test for entitlement to disability living allowance, suggested by the disability benefits forum; and if he will make a statement. [89046]

Mr. Bayley: In line with recommendations from the Social Security Select Committee, we have discussed with the Disability Benefits Forum the possibility of developing alternatives to the current tests for entitlement to Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance, and it was agreed that further work should be undertaken. We are now exploring the possibility of using a set of activities undertaken by disabled people in managing their lives (AMLs) as a means of assessing need; work on this is being carried out by an AMLs Working Group which includes representatives from disability organisations in its membership.

The Working Group is currently in the process of carrying out initial testing of models based on AMLs, and progress was discussed with the Working Group on 25 June 1999. It was agreed that testing and analysis of the results should continue; it is, however, too early to say if it will be possible to produce an AMLs system which represents a significant and worthwhile improvement on the present methods of assessing entitlement to the benefits.

Annuities

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners on Income Support are receiving income from an annuity. [89004]

Mr. Timms: Estimates from the Family Resources Survey 1997–98 suggest that less than 1 per cent. of pensioners on Income Support were receiving income from an annuity.

Notes:

1. Pensioners are defined as single people aged 60 years or over and couples where at least one partner is aged 60 years or over.

2. Estimates of receipt of Income Support and annuity income are based on respondent's own assessment and therefore may be subject to mis-reporting.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the difference was in each year since 1980 between the amount by which pensions would have increased if based on (a) the retail prices index and (b) average earnings. [88177]

WALES

North Wales Health Authority

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department informed the North Wales Health Authority of its capital expenditure allocation for 1999–2000. [87998]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Capital allocations for 1999–2000 were issued to health authorities on the 27 May 1999 as part of the health authority cash allocation announcement. NHS Trusts were issued with their capital allocations on 22 June 1999.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

European Social Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what preparations he is undertaking to develop within Wales appropriate financial management and payment systems for European Social Fund delivery for the period after 2000; and if he will make a statement. [87994]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is in discussion with his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment over arrangements under which responsibility for payments and financial management of ESF in Wales would transfer to the National Assembly for Wales from 2000. The terms will, however, need to be acceptable to the Assembly.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for how many appointments to non-departmental public bodies he was responsible prior to the passing of the Government of Wales Act 1998; and for how many he is currently responsible. [88587]

Mr. Michael: I currently have sole responsibility for making 404 appointments to Executive, Advisory and Health Non-departmental Public Bodies in Wales. Responsibility for all these appointments will transfer to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July.

As Secretary of State, I will retain responsibility for a small number of appointments to bodies which do not have NDPB status, such as the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales and the Courts and Councils of the Universities.

There are also several UK bodies to which I make appointments, or where I have joint responsibility for making appointments, or am consulted on appointments. These responsibilities will also transfer to the Assembly by means of an Order in Council under Section 30 of the Government of Wales Act 1998.

Detailed information about public appointments for which I have had responsibility as Secretary of State for Wales is published quarterly in "Appointments made by the Secretary of State for Wales". The latest edition is dated March 1999 and is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-departmental public bodies there were in Wales prior to the Government of Wales Act 1998; and how many there are currently. [88586]

Mr. Michael: There were 42 non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department immediately prior to the Government of Wales Act 1998; there are now 37. The five bodies that have been abolished since 31 July 1998 are the Development Board for Rural Wales; the Land Authority for Wales; the Residuary Body for Wales; Tai Cymru; and the Welsh Advisory Committee on Drug and Alcohol Misuse.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the non-departmental public bodies which have been abolished and (b) established since May 1997. [88642]

Mr. Michael: Since 1 May 1997, the following non-departmental public bodies have been abolished: the Agricultural Advisory Panel for Wales; the Development Board for Rural Wales; the Land Authority for Wales; the Residuary Body for Wales; the Staff Commission for Wales; Tai Cymru; the Welsh Advisory Committee on Drug and Alcohol Misuse; and the Welsh Council for Post-Graduate Medical and Dental Education. In addition, the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation has been identified for abolition. No new non-departmental public bodies have been established by the Secretary of State since 1 May 1997.

Heart Bypass Operations

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently waiting (a) 0 to six months, (b) six to 12 months and (c) over 12 months for heart bypass operations in each NHS trust in Wales. [88924]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on the number of people waiting less than six months for coronary heart bypass operations is not collected centrally. At 31 March 1999, the numbers waiting 6 to 12 months and over 12 months in each of the relevant NHS trusts in Wales is given in the following table.

Numbers waiting over six months for coronary heart bypass graft surgery by NHS trust, 31 March 1999

Trust	Number waiting 6 to 12 months	over 12 months
Morriston Hospital NHS trust[1]	36	3
University Hospital of Wales NHS trust[2]	76	5

[1] Forms part of the new Swansea NHS trust
[2] Forms part of the new UHW/Llandough trust

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Refugees

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Welsh Administration and Welsh local authorities about the implications of the Immigration and Asylum Bill for refugees in Wales. [89049]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Home Office is in the lead on this matter, but Welsh Office officials have been directly involved in considering the strategic and operational implications for Wales from the outset.

Strategically, Welsh Office officials liaise with the Home Office and, together with the Welsh Local Government Association and Welsh Refugee Council, attend meetings of the Home Office Stakeholder Group.

Operationally, with particular regard to the proposed support and consortium arrangements, Welsh Office officials initiated consultation with interested parties in Wales such as the WLGA, Local Authorities, the Welsh Refugee Council and other potential consortium agencies, and play an active part in the planning group which has arisen from this consultation.

Internally, a group drawing together all the relevant interests meets on a regular basis.

From 1 July, this role will fall to the National Assembly for Wales. I expect Assembly officials will continue to play an active and supportive role in conjunction with other interested parties to ensure that the implications of the Bill for Wales are fully considered and that the interests of Wales are fully taken into account.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average waiting time for appointments with consultants in (a) obstetrics, (b) trauma and orthopaedics, (c) ENT, (d) coronary, (e) general surgery, (f) urology, (g) ophthalmology, (h) oral surgery, (i) gynaecology and (j) other specialties in each health authority area in Wales. [88904]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on routine out-patient waiting times for some common procedures, by consultant, is contained in the quarterly "Hospital Waiting Times Information for GPs and Patients" publication, a copy of which is held in the Library.

Information on average out-patient waiting times by health authority and specialty is not collected centrally.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average waiting time between first appointments and any surgery deemed necessary in (a) obstetrics, (b) trauma and orthopaedics, (c) ENT, (d) coronary, (e) general surgery, (f) urology, (g) ophthalmology, (h) oral surgery, (i) gynaecology and (j) other specialties in each health authority area in Wales. [88905]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: For all patients treated in a given period, data is available which gives the average waiting time between the decision of a consultant to admit a patient for treatment and the actual date of admission to hospital. For 1998, the average (mean) waiting times in weeks for each specialty and health authority are given in the following table.

Mean waiting times for selected specialities, by health authority, patients seen in 1998[1]—mean waits given to the nearest whole week

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in each health authority area in Wales were referred to hospital out-patient departments between 1990 and the last year for which figures are available to see consultants in (a) obstetrics, (b) trauma and orthopaedics, (c) ENT, (d) coronary, (e) general surgery, (f) urology, (g) opthalmology, (h) oral surgery, (i) gynaecology and (j) other specialties. [88934]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data are reported to the Welsh Office on the total number of referrals to NHS trusts in Wales. The totals for Wales in each of the years 1994–95 to 1998–99 are given in the following table. A breakdown of the data by health authority and specialty is not held centrally.

The total number of referrals to NHS trusts in Wales, 1994–95 to 1998–99:

[1] Data as reported to the Welsh Office by Welsh NHS trusts. They include estimates for Powys Health Care NHS trust for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultants there are in each health authority area in Wales working on (a) full-time contracts and (b) part-time contracts in (i) obstetrics, (ii) trauma and orthopaedics, (iii) ENT, (iv) coronary, (v) general surgery, (vi) urology, (vii) ophthalmology, (viii) oral surgery and (ix) gynaecology and (x) other specialties. [88936]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on NHS medical and dental staff is collected annually as at 30 September. The latest available information relates to September 1997 and is given in the following table.

[1] A consultant working in more than one health authority area is counted in each authority in which they work but only once in the data for Wales as a whole.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing a scheme to provide financial assistance for people who contracted hepatitis C through their haemophilia treatment; over how many years the scheme would last; and how many people would be eligible for such assistance. [89035]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: In Wales, we believe there about 105 haemophiliacs who have been infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment. We estimate that the cost for a special payment scheme for haemophiliacs would be in the region of £7m-£8m based on UK estimates.

Government policy remains that those infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment should not receive special payments, as the same considerations would apply to patients infected with another illness or otherwise harmed as a result of medical or surgical procedure not resulting from negligence.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with haemophilia were infected with hepatitis C through their NHS treatment before 1986; and how many are still alive. [89034]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of financial assistance schemes for people who contracted hepatitis C through contaminated blood products in (a) Canada, (b) Ireland and (c) Italy; and if he will assess the benefits of introducing similar schemes in Wales. [89036]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: It continues to be Government policy that compensation or other financial help to particular patients or groups of patients is paid only where the NHS or individuals working in it have been at fault. We are aware of compensation schemes in other countries, but these relate to the specific policy and operational circumstances in those countries and a direct comparison would not be appropriate.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Dental Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of general dental practices are linked electronically to the Dental Practice Board in each health authority area. [89037]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The position as of 31 March 1999, as reported by the Dental Practice Board (DPB), is that the percentage of general dental practices that are able to transmit claims (i.e. are linked) electronically to the Dental Practice Board in each health authority area are:

	Per cent.
Gwent	49.1
Bro Taf	49.6
Dyfed Powys	44.9
Iechyd Morgannwg	46.9

This represents a figure of 48.1 per cent. for Wales as a whole. May I clarify the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 529. The figure of 66 per cent. quoted in my answer, based on data provided by the DPB, referred to general dental practitioners in Wales who utilised information management and technology systems at that time, of which a proportion were linked electronically to the DPB.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if local health groups will be required to make available funding for dental audit on at least the same scale as the funding which is already available. [89038]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The new clinical governance agenda gives local health groups an important role to play in encouraging and supporting quality improvement projects. This therefore provides a mechanism for the dental profession to have equal access to funding for dental audit projects. Applications from the primary health care sector, including dentists, will be assessed by the relevant local health group, all of whom have an elected dental member. Funding will be made available on the basis of the merits of the application/business case submitted.

In addition, the Department funds a Dental Adviser post whose primary role is to encourage and support successful applications for funding from the dental profession in Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

CABINET OFFICE

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is his estimate of the amounts of confiscated illegal drug assets that will be used for anti-drugs measures in each of the next 10 years; and what percentage he estimates this will be of the total value of illegal drugs trafficked in the United Kingdom. [86955]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The first annual report of the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator sets out that from the financial year 1999–2000, assets seized from drug traffickers in the UK will be channelled back into anti-drugs work through a new Confiscated Assets Fund (CAF). The activities to be funded will be identified by the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator based on his assessment of the strategic priorities. For 1999–2000 the Fund will total £3 million; this should rise to £5 million in 2000–01 and £7 million in 2001–02. The amounts allocated to the Fund thereafter will be set according to receipts in the previous year.

There are no figures available for the value of illegal drugs trafficked.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88468]

Mr. Vaz: Officials from my Department regularly attend meetings of Council working groups. Occasionally my Department is represented by officials from the United Kingdom's Permanent Representation to the European Union. I have listed the working groups with which my Department is most closely involved, and the number of times these have met in the last 12 months.

Treasury Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) representations were made, (b) correspondence was had and (c) meetings were held by (i) the Lord Chancellor and (ii) the Parliamentary Secretary's predecessor about (1) the creation of the vacancy for Treasury Counsel (Common Law) in May 1997 and (2) the filling of the vacancy. [89114]

Mr. Vaz: Soon after the Lord Chancellor was appointed to that office in May 1997, it became apparent to him that the then First Treasury Counsel (Common Law) should be recommended to Her Majesty for appointment as a puisne judge of the High Court. He informed the Attorney-General that this appointment would be offered. The Attorney-General and the then Solicitor-General consulted widely as to who should be appointed to the post of First Treasury Counsel, and the Lord Chancellor was among those who were consulted. Once the Attorney-General had decided who should be appointed, his Department had correspondence with the Lord Chancellor's Department to synchronise the announcement of the two appointments.

To the best of my knowledge, my predecessor was not in any way concerned with either of these appointments.

PRIME MINISTER

Devolution (Scotland)

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement regarding the giving of advice by the First Minister to Her Majesty on the exercise of her functions in connection with the implementation of the Scotland Act 1998. [89358]

The Prime Minister: In a number of situations advice is by convention, given by a Minister of the Crown to Her Majesty in respect of the exercise of her functions. The majority of Her Majesty's functions in respect of which she receives advice from a Minister of the Crown in this way relate to the making of appointments and the use of the Royal prerogative.

As a consequence of the new constitutional arrangements under the Scotland Act 1998, it is proposed that in some of those situations the First Minister instead of a Minister of the Crown will give advice, by convention, to Her Majesty after 1 July in respect of her functions. No formal order is required to give effect to these transfers, which will be carried out by administrative arrangement. In this context "Her Majesty's functions" refer to her statutory functions and cases where Her Majesty acts under her prerogative or common law powers. It concerns only those functions of Her Majesty which she exercises personally and not those which are exercised on her behalf by a Minister of the Crown. It deals only with circumstances in which a Minister of the Crown provides advice to Her Majesty by convention and it does not deal with circumstances in which a Minister of the Crown exercises a statutory function of advising Her Majesty. Where appropriate, provision has been made in the Scotland Act, or in subordinate legislation under the Scotland Act, to transfer these statutory advice-giving functions from the Minister of the Crown to the First Minister.

In cases where Her Majesty exercises a function which is exercisable within devolved competence for the purposes of the Scotland Act 1998 and she is, by convention, advised by a Minister of the Crown about the exercise of that function, then after 1 July she will be advised by the First Minister instead of by a Minister of the Crown.

For example, Her Majesty exercises the Royal prerogative of mercy and appoints regius professors of the ancient Scottish universities in this way. A list of further examples of circumstances in which Her Majesty will in future be advised by the First Minister instead of by the Secretary of State in relation to the exercise of her functions which relate in whole or in part to a devolved matter has been placed in the Library.

There are some matters in respect of which the Prime Minister gives advice to Her Majesty on the exercise of her functions and on which it would be appropriate for the Prime Minister to consult or to take advice from the First Minister. These matters include recommendations of Scottish candidates for honours and dignities, which are a reserved matter, and advice on the appointment of Lords Lieutenants in Scotland, the Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland and members of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution and the Forestry Commission. There are also matters where a Minister of the Crown gives advice to Her Majesty and where it also would be appropriate for the First Minister to be consulted by or to give advice to that Minister of the Crown.

The Scotland Act 1998 confers upon the First Minister various functions of advising Her Majesty either directly or through the Prime Minister. This includes seeking Her Majesty's approval to the appointment of Scottish Ministers and recommending to Her Majesty persons for appointment as Scottish Law Officers. Section 95 of the Act sets out in detail the arrangements for the First Minister to nominate persons for appointment as Lord President of the Court of Session and Lord Justice Clerk to the Prime Minister, who in turn makes recommendations on those appointments to Her Majesty. It also provides for the First Minister to recommend to Her Majesty the appointment of other judges.

In a number of other situations, Her Majesty is advised in relation to the exercise of her functions by the Privy Council rather than by a Minister of the Crown. The Privy Council deals with various items of Scottish business, both prerogative business and statutory matters, such as the grant of Royal Charters and Privy Council appointments. I have placed a paper in the Libraries of both Houses that briefly describes the circumstances in which the First Minister will, from 1 July, contribute to Privy Council business in the same manner as the Secretary of State for Scotland has done.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 30 June. [88447]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

As the House knows, the Prime Minister has decided to remain in Northern Ireland today, in order to make every effort to secure agreement between the parties in Northern Ireland.

I am sure the whole House will wish him, the Irish Prime Minister and all the parties well in their endeavours to bring lasting peace to Northern Ireland.

United Nations

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has put forward for reform of the United Nations. [87763]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 23 June 1999, Official Report, column 399.

HEALTH

Coronary Heart Disease

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the national framework for coronary heart disease will be published. [85963]

Mr. Hutton: A rolling programme of National Service Frameworks was announced last year. The first two frameworks—on coronary heart disease and on mental health—are planned to be published this summer.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, column 296, on cardiac rehabilitation programmes, when he expects to publish the national service framework for coronary heart disease. [87852]

Mr. Hutton: A rolling programme of National Service Frameworks was announced last summer. The first two—on coronary heart disease and on mental health—will be published this summer.

Genetically Modified Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the antibiotics to which marker genes used in the production of genetically modified crops convey resistance and the medical uses of those antibiotics. [86317]

Ms Jowell: The antibiotic marker genes and the antibiotics to which they convey resistance that are used in the production of genetic modification of plant crops are Kanamycin; Ampicillin; Hygromycin; Streptomycin; Spectinomycin; Tetracycline; Amikacin and Gentamycin. There are no currently licensed indications for Hygromycin.

The licensed indications for the others are:

Kanamycin:

For the treatment of infections due to gram-negative organisms resistant to other antibiotics. It may also be used in the treatment of certain staphylococcal infections due to multi-resistant strains, and in gonorrhoea.

Ampicillin:

Urinary-tract infections, otitis media, sinusitis, chronic bronchitis, invasive salmonellosis, gonorrhoea.

Streptomycin:

Tuberculosis, in combination with other drugs; adjunct to doxycycline in brucellosis.

Tetracycline:

Exacerbations of chronic bronchitis; brucellosis, chlamydia; mycoplasma, and rickettsia; acne vulgaris, rosacea.

Spectinomycin:

Gonorrhoea caused by penicillin-resistant.

Amikacin:

Serious Gram-negative infections resistant to gentamicin.

Gentamicin:

Septicaemia and neonatal sepsis; meningitis and other CNS infections; biliary-tract infection, acute pyelonephritis or prostatitis, endocarditis caused by viridans streptococci or Enterococcus faecalis (with penicillin); pneumonia in hospital patients adjunct in listerial meningitus.

Surgical Detritus

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 May 1999, Official Report, column 425, how much compensation has been paid (a) to persons left with surgical detritus inside them following an operation and (b) to the relatives of those who died as a consequence of such negligence in each of the last three years. [86650]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Litigation Authority reports that payments in respect of claims arising from a foreign body left inside a patient following surgery amounted to £1,073,192 in the period 1 April 1995 to date.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many actions were brought against NHS trusts alleging negligence arising from surgical detritus left in wounds following an operation for the most recent year for which figures are available. [87671]

Mr. Denham: 252 claims arising from foreign bodies left inside a patient were reported to the National Health Service Litigation Authority in the period 1 April 1995 to date.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the report on the review of radiotherapy provision. [87970]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 14 June 1999, Official Report, column 11.

NHS Management Posts

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress the Government have made on reducing management posts in the NHS. [88216]

Mr. Denham: We recognise the importance of good management in improving health and modernising the National Health Service. We have no plans, therefore, to set targets to reduce the number of management posts in the NHS. However, we remain committed to tackling unnecessary bureaucracy to ensure that a greater proportion of every pound spent in the NHS is directed towards patient care.

Action taken to reduce NHS management costs in 1997–98 and 1998–99 have already freed up £¼ billion by 1999–2000 that would otherwise have been spent on bureaucracy. Further reductions are planned in 1999–2000.

Long-term Care

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many long-term care beds for elderly and mentally disabled people were available in each health authority area in England on 1 May. [88227]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested on the number of long-term care beds in each Health Authority is not available centrally.

The available information on the number of residential care beds and beds in wards open 24 hours within each health authority area in England for 1997–98 has been placed in the Library.

Allergy Bracelets

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make funds available to Medic Alert in order to defray the costs of re-engraving allergy bracelets for those on low incomes following the proposed changes to telephone numbers in the Central London area. [88656]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has no funds available for this purpose. Telephone numbering is a matter for the Office of Telecommunications.

Waiting Times (South Staffordshire)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average waiting times from GP referral to inpatient admission for patients living in the South Staffordshire Health Authority area for each of the last four years for which data are available. [88446]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not collect data on patients' total waiting time from general practitioner referral to inpatient admission.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment where detailed information is kept on the individual school playing fields sold between 1979 and 1999. [88661]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Prior to 1 October 1998, there were no restrictions, other than those that may have been imposed by the planning authorities, on the sale of school playing fields by local education authorities. The Department does not, therefore, have any information on the sale of individual school playing fields by local authorities before that date.

The Department does have information about the sale of school playing fields by grant-maintained schools from 1988 to the present.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the school playing fields which the Government have prevented from being sold and developed (a) between 1 May 1997 and 30 September 1998 and (b) since 1 October 1998. [88663]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Since 1 May 1997, applications by the governing bodies to sell playing fields at the following grant-maintained schools have been rejected:

Merrill College, Derby
Cranbrook School, Kent
Lincoln Christ's Hospital School
The King's School, Peterborough
Deacon's School, Peterborough.

Before 1 October 1998, there was no control over the sale of playing fields by local authorities. The Government introduced control by bringing into force section 77 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998. Since then, all application from local authorities to sell, or change the use of school playing fields have been considered against strict criteria. So far, all the applications that have been considered have met the criteria and have, therefore, been approved. It would not be in a local authority's interest to submit an application that did not meet the criteria. What we do not know is how many local authorities have been deterred from submitting applications to sell school playing fields that, prior to 1 October 1998, they could have sold without needing consent.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will assess the impact on community usage of non-sport development of school sports grounds. [88743]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Before a local authority, governing body or foundation body in England may dispose, or change the use of a school playing field, they must first secure the prior consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Applications for consent are considered against four criteria published in DfEE Circular 3/99, "The Protection of School Playing Fields". One of these criteria is that the playing field provision and other sports facilities to be left will meet the needs of the local community. This is in addition to any consideration of proposed development under the planning system.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that schools do not replace all their grass pitches with artificial surfaces. [88496]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Whether or not a maintained school's outdoor sporting provision is grass, hard surfaced or artificial surfaced is a decision best taken at local level. However, paragraph 55 of DfEE Circular 3/99 "The Protection of School Playing Fields", highlights the fact that not all types of games can be played on artificial surfaces and that a balance may need to be struck. Our Building Bulletin 85, "School Grounds: A Guide to Good Practice", provides detailed advice.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's policy on use of school sports facilities by the community. [88744]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Individual governing bodies control the use of their school's premises but, in doing so out of school hours, the law requires them to have regard to the desirability of making their premises available to the wider community. We value community use and the "Code of Practice on LEA-School Relations", published this year, states that > "schools should seek out opportunities to develop their community role".

Later this year, the Department will be issuing further guidance on community use of school facilities as part of a drive to better promote community use.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in national insurance contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88859]

Mr. Mudie: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Department for Education and Employment will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until the Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is therefore not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Department for Education and Employment.

Key Stage 2 (Attainment Levels)

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps he has taken to encourage schools with able children to take up the opportunity to sit level 6 tests in English, Mathematics and Science at Key Stage 2 SATS; [88833]

(2) what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the numbers of children who attained level 6 at Key Stage 2 SATS in 1998 in English; what conclusions were reached; and what future work is planned on this subject area. [88834]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is the role of the teacher to assess which children are working within Level 6 in a subject and therefore which pupils should be entered for both the Levels 3–5 tests and the Level 6 extension test. Level 6 is awarded in a subject only when a child has attained a Level 5 on the main Levels 3–5 National Curriculum tests in addition to achieving sufficient marks on the extension test.

The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) is currently reviewing National Curriculum extension tests and is taking full account of the recommendations in the recent Select Committee Report on Highly Able Children. The Government will ensure that any changes are consistent with its commitment to improve the education of gifted and talented children.

The QCA has commissioned research, on behalf of the Secretary of State, from the University of Leeds and the National Federation of Educational Research (NFER) to look at the design of the Level 6 test. Their job will be to incorporate comments received by the QCA about children's performance at Level 6 and how future tests can be designed to make them more accessible to pupils.

59 pupils achieved the Level 6 English extension test in 1998.

Out-of-school Clubs

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy towards local education authorities seeking to impose full cost recovery or full commercial rate charges on out of school clubs operating out of premises owned by local education authorities for their use of the premises and associated facilities. [R] [88959]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 29 June 1999]: A School's budget may not be used to subsidise non-school activities. Sections 149–152 of the Education Act 1996 and, from 1 September 1999, Schedule 13 to the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, require that community use of school premises must be self-financing. Rates are not payable by out-of-school clubs. Paragraph 58 of the "Code of Practice on LEA-School Relations" states

> "there may be a natural tendency to maximise profits from letting to community users. But nothing in guidance from LEAs about the costs to be recouped, or in decisions taken by governing bodies ... should promote the maximisation of profits at the expense of existing, or potential, benefits to the wider community."

The department will be issuing further guidance on community use of school facilities later this year.

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance his Department has issued to local education authorities concerning the proper basis upon which out of school clubs operating out of premises owned by local education authorities should be charged for their use of the premises and associated facilities. [R] [88960]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The Department's advice is currently set out in paragraph 58 of the "Code of Practice on LEA-School Relations". This states that

> "there may be a natural tendency to maximise profits from lettings to community users. But noting in guidance from LEAs about the costs to be recouped, or in decisions taken by governing bodies ... should promote the maximisation of profits at the expense of existing, or potential, benefits to the wider community."

Legislation requires that community use is self-financing. A school may not subsidise non-school activities with its own budget. The Department will be issuing further guidance on community use of school facilities later this year.

Sustainable Development Education Panel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to respond to the recommendations of the First Annual report of the Sustainable Development Education Panel; and if he will make a statement. [88891]

Mr. Charles Clarke: These are important and wide-ranging recommendations. I congratulate the Panel on its hard work.

I met the Chairman of the Panel, Sir Geoffrey Holland, and Panel members in May, and discussed their plans to consult on the recommendations in the Annual Report affecting further and higher education, youth services, and training for employment. As far as the schools sector is concerned, we agreed that the current consultation on the draft National Curriculum would enable the sector to state its views on the coverage of sustainable development, particularly in geography, science and citizenship.

I am keen to develop appropriate partnerships in the area of out-of-school education, and I asked the Panel to let me have further proposals on this. I am also keen to involve employers as much as possible in spreading sustainable development messages and I hope to speak at an event organised by the Panel in due course.

I have written to Anthea Millet, the Chief Executive of the Teacher Training Agency, and to Chris Woodhead, HM Chief Inspector of Schools, asking them to meet

Sir Geoffrey to discuss the Annual Report's implications for teacher training and the inspection framework. The meeting between Sir Geoffrey and Anthea Millett has now taken place, and I understand that the TTA will write to Sir Geoffrey shortly to follow up the meeting with some suggestions on sustainable development.

I propose to meet the Panel Chairman and members from time to time to review progress.

EFL Courses

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on the budgets of those further education colleges which are major providers of English as a foreign language courses of the current proposal by the Further Education Funding Council to withdraw Schedule 2 funding; and if he will make a statement; [88888]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Further Education Funding Council concerning its proposal to withdraw Schedule 2 funding for English as a foreign language courses; [88890]

(3) what representations he has received concerning the proposal by the Further Education Funding Council to withdraw Schedule 2 funding for English as a foreign language courses. [88892]

Mr. Mudie: The Further Education Funding Council (FEFC) is reviewing the position of English as a Foreign Language (EFL) qualifications with representatives of further education colleges which are major providers of EFL qualifications. But there is no current proposal from the FEFC to withdraw Schedule 2 funding from EFL courses. The FEFC continues to fund EFL qualifications under Schedule 2(f), such courses having previously been funded under Schedule 2(a).

Further Education

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how often the Charter for Further Education is reviewed and revised; and if he will make a statement; [88582]

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the standards in the Charter for Further Education are being met; and if he will make a statement. [88583]

Mr. Mudie: The Charter for Further Education was last reviewed and an addendum issued in October 1997. "Service First—the new charter programme" encourages the continued development and revision of local charters in line with the Government's commitment to improving local services. Further Education sector colleges have their own charters which focus on local needs. The national charter remains under review.

The Further Education Funding Council Inspectorate monitors colleges' performance against local and national charter standards, as part of its ongoing assessment of quality in the sector. Inspectors' findings are routinely included in published college reports. These highlight good practice and, where necessary, issues which need to be addressed.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 100, concerning the costs of education and training for 16 to 19 year olds, if he will harmonise the funding per student of sixth form colleges and local education authority-maintained school sixth forms. [88780]

Mr. Mudie: At present, it is the responsibility of Local Authorities to allocate funds to schools, and of the Further Education Funding Council to allocate funds to other sixth-form providers.

Today the Government issued a White Paper "Learning to Succeed", setting out plans for a Learning and Skills Council which will in future fund Further Education colleges. A parallel consultation paper has been published today inviting views on options for the funding of school sixth forms in the light of the new arrangements. I refer my hon. Friend to these documents, which have been placed in the Library this afternoon, and to the statement made to the House this afternoon by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 100, about A level funding, what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions about the average level of funding of students at sixth-form colleges; and if he will make a statement. [88575]

Mr. Mudie: There are regular discussions between the Secretaries of State for Education and Employment and Environment, Transport and the Regions on many issues. The DETR was naturally involved in discussions leading up to the publication today of our White Paper "Learning to Succeed", and a parallel consultation paper on options for future arrangements for school sixth-form funding.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with sixth form teachers and principals about the review of post-16 educational training; and if he will make a statement. [88585]

Mr. Mudie: A number of sixth-form colleges responded to our consultation on the post-16 review as well as representative organisations of colleges and teaching unions. I have also recently met the National Union of Teachers. The Government today issued a White Paper setting out its plans for post-16 education and training.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding the pay levels of teaching staff in sixth form colleges. [88434]

Mr. Mudie: We have recently met representatives of the Sixth Form Colleges Employers Forum and the National Joint Council for Sixth Form Colleges to discuss issues about the pay and conditions of sixth form college lecturers. We have received a number of letters from hon. Members about this issue. We have replied to those representations, noting that we are providing very substantial extra funds for further education—£725 million over the next two years. Colleges are responsible for the pay and conditions of their staff. Nevertheless, we take every opportunity to encourage unions and employers to work together to determine a sensible way forward under the improved circumstances we have created.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will take steps to harmonise pay levels of teaching staff in sixth form colleges and staff teaching the same age group in schools with sixth forms. [88433]

Mr. Mudie: Sixth Form Colleges are independent, and we do not wish to interfere with that independence. We are providing very substantial extra funds for further education—£725 million over the next two years. This will offer colleges more room to manoeuvre when setting pay levels.

The Government today issued a White Paper "Learning to Succeed", setting out plans for a Learning and Skills Council which will in future fund further education colleges. A parallel consultation paper was published inviting views on options for the funding of school sixth forms in the light of the new arrangements.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were employed by his Department in each of the years from 1993–94 to 1998–99; if he will break down the total into the categories (a) male, (b) female, (c) registered disability and (d) ethnic minority; and if his Department has an equal opportunities policy. [88684]

Mr. Mudie: The following table shows the breakdown of staff figures in DfEE from 1993–94 to 1998–99:

1 April 1993	8,978	3,950	5,028	—	—
1 April 1994	6,561	2,887	3,674	—	—
1 April 1995	5,683	2,500	3,183	—	—
1 April 1996	5,212	2,345	2,867	240	324
1 April 1997	4,795	2,206	2,589	226	312
1 April 1999	4,094	1,874	2,220	247	347

DfEE has a comprehensive Equal Opportunities Strategy which overarches our proactive equal opportunities action plans. Equality of opportunity is central to the achievement of DfEE's objectives and values. It is about the effectiveness of everything we do—how we manage ourselves, how we develop policy and how we deliver services. The Department is committed to being an equal opportunities employers. We value and welcome diversity and aim to develop all our staff to enable them to make a full contribution to meeting the Department's objectives, and to fulfil their own potential on merit. DfEE will not tolerate harassment or other unfair discrimination on grounds of sex, marital status, race, colour, nationality, ethnic origin, disability, age, religion or sexual orientation. We will promote and support the use of a range of flexible working patterns to enable staff to balance home and work responsibilities; and we will treat people fairly irrespective of their working arrangements.

TREASURY

Offshore Oil Revenues

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the last five financial years the amount of revenue received per barrel of oil extracted from United Kingdom offshore fields. [88790]

Mrs. Roche: North Sea oil tax revenues per barrel of oil produced in the same financial year, including revenues from gas production converted into equivalent amounts of oil, are in the table.

Financial year	Tax[1] revenue per barrel (£)
1995–96	1.70
1996–97	2.40
1997–98	2.20
1998–99[2]	1.60

[1] Petroleum revenue tax, corporation tax, and royalty

[2] Provisional

VAT

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the issue, transfer or receipt of, or any dealing with, any security or secondary security; [88379]

(2) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the underwriting of the issue of any money, or security, or note or order for the payment of money; [88380]

(3) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the services of the authorised corporate director of an open-ended investment company so far as they consist in managing the company's scheme property; [88381]

(4) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the management of an authorised unit trust scheme or of a trust-based scheme by the operator of the scheme; [88382]

(5) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the making of any advance of the granting of any credit; [88383]

(6) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the provision of the facility of instalment credit finance in a hire-purchase, conditional sale or credit sale agreement for which facility a separate charge is made and disclosed to the recipient of the supply of goods; [88384]

(7) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the provision of administrative arrangements and documentation and the transfer of the title to the goods in connection with the provision of the facility of instalment credit finance in a hire-purchase, conditional sale or credit

sale agreement for which facility a separate charge is made and disclosed to the recipient of the supply of goods if the total consideration therefore is specified in the agreement and does not exceed £10; [88385]

(8) if he will estimate the total annual revenue if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) five per cent. on the issue, transfer or receipt of, or any dealing with, money, any security for money or any note or order for the payment of money. [88386]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to provide the requested estimates due to insufficient data on these specific financial activities.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what prior consultations were held by Customs and Excise with trade sectors concerned by the legislative changes enacted by the VAT (Finance) Order 1999; and if he will make a statement. [88920]

Dawn Primarolo: Through the regular meetings of the joint finance sector liaison group, businesses have been aware for some time of Customs and Excise concerns in this area. It was not possible to consult on specific proposals because of the risk of tax avoidance. In this area there is a history of forestalling adverse tax changes by the use of artificial pre-payment schemes that side-step the intended effect for some years in the future, leading to considerable loss of revenue.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what legal advice he sought on (a) the vires of the VAT (Finance) Order 1999 and (b) its compatibility with European law; and if he will make a statement. [88922]

Dawn Primarolo: In considering the content of the Order, Customs took advice from in-house lawyers and from independent leading Counsel.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects Customs and Excise to produce written guidance on how the provisions of the VAT (Finance) Order 1999 will be applied; and if he will make a statement. [88926]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise produced standard explanatory material on Budget Day when the VAT (Finance) Order 1999 was announced. Immediately following this they undertook detailed explanatory meetings with trade representatives and advisers. Customs have sent a draft of a more detailed guidance note to a number of trade representatives for comment. They aim to publish this by mid July.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review with Customs and Excise how they propose to handle judgments of VAT tribunals where both the financial sector and Customs and Excise have agreed beforehand to treat such judgments as test cases; and if he will make a statement. [88923]

Dawn Primarolo: The care and management of VAT, including the conduct of litigation, is the statutory responsibility of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. They did not agree to treat as a "test" case any recent or current case concerning financial services.

The Tribunal has primary responsibility for determining the facts of a case. Its decisions are binding between the parties but do not constitute binding legal precedent. Either party has a right of appeal on a matter of law to the higher courts; and on matters of European law either the Tribunal or a higher court may refer questions to the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to adopt Article 4.4 of the EC Sixth VAT Directive; and if he will make a statement. [88913]

Dawn Primarolo: Article 4.4 of the Sixth VAT Directive has been incorporated into UK law as VAT Act 1994 sections 4 and 43 and Schedule 1 paragraphs 1A and 2. There are no plans to introduce further legislation.

Inland Revenue 35

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been received concerning the introduction of Inland Revenue 35. [88415]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 June 1999]: There have been a substantial number of responses both to the Budget Day Press Release IR35 and the subsequent material which the Inland Revenue have been distributing to interested parties. The Government are currently considering the representations.

Ms Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made on the implementation of Inland Revenue 35. [88222]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue is currently considering representations received in response to the proposals.

Duty Free

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise Information Sheet (June 1999) regarding excise duty and VAT arrangements following the withdrawal of duty free sales of goods to intra-Community travellers, what is the VAT liability on goods liable to UK VAT in the domestic market purchased on a flight from London to New York which is subsequently diverted to Paris (a) when the passengers are permitted to disembark at Paris to join a new flight to New York and (b) when passengers remain on the same aircraft until it is able to continue to New York. [88918]

Dawn Primarolo: The withdrawal of duty free sales of goods with effect from 1 July only affects travellers on intra-Community journeys. Passengers travelling outside the EU will continue to be able to purchase duty free goods. Diversion of an international flight via another Community airport would not affect the VAT relief of sales to passengers on that flight. In such circumstances passengers, and any duty free goods that they had purchased, would be subject to the usual arrangements whereby they would remain within a Customs controlled area pending their onward flight.

Community Budget

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the Statement on the 1999 Community Budget. [89459]

Ms Hewitt: I have today laid before Parliament the Statement on the 1999 Community Budget, entitled "European Community Finances". This White Paper is the nineteenth in the series. As in the past, it covers annual budgetary matters and includes details of recent developments in European Community financial management and in countering fraud against the Community Budget. It also describes the Community Budget for 1999 as adopted by the European Parliament, and the United Kingdom's gross and net contributions to the Community Budget between 1996 and 1999.

I have placed copies of the White Paper in both Libraries of the House.

Bank Accounts

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the most recent figures showing how many people hold current bank accounts in each of the regions covered by the new regional development agencies in the age ranges (i) 0 to 8, (ii) 18 to 24, (iii) 25 to 50, (iv) 50 to 65, (v) 65 to 85 and (vi) 85 years and over. [88650]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Notes:
1. Data are not provided for the under 18 age group as information on children holding current bank accounts is not available. Samples sizes for the highest age group are also too small to support reliable estimates of the statistics in question. Other age ranges provided in the tables do not exactly match those requested as these had missing ranges and overlapping boundaries. Therefore, age ranges which are as close as possible to those requested have been used.
2. The estimates are based on sample counts that have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors that control for region, Council Tax Band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response.
3. All figures are provided in thousands and have been rounded to the nearest ten thousand.

Overpaid Tax

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to ensure that older people are aware of their right to claim back overpaid tax. [89146]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are considering running a Taxback campaign in the year 2000. The aim of this would be to stimulate free media publicity and to encourage people, including the elderly, who had overpaid tax on their bank and building society interest to claim it back.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of the total amount of overpaid tax by older people on their income from savings. [89147]

Dawn Primarolo: No information on which to base an estimate is available from Inland Revenue's records. Tax offices will generally be aware of cases where tax has been overpaid only when tax returns are sent in, or when claims are made for the repayment of tax deducted at source.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will establish an expert multi-disciplinary audit of the Meat Hygiene Service independent of the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group. [88286]

Mr. Rooker: The work of the Meat Hygiene Service is scrutinised by NAO, the Audit Consultancy and Management Services Division of MAFF, operational audits by the State Veterinary Service, the Intervention Board as well as by auditors of the Joint Food Standards and Safety Group.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to ensure that the performance of the Meat Hygiene Service is independently monitored. [88279]

Mr. Rooker: The Meat Hygiene Service's performance targets are set by the Minister and monitored independently by the Audit Consultancy and Management Services Division of MAFF. Information on the Meat Hygiene Service's performance in key areas is made widely available in the monthly publications "Meat Hygiene Enforcement Report" and "BSE Enforcement Bulletin".

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the current arrangements for auditing the performance of the Meat Hygiene Service. [88396]

Mr. Rooker: Audits of the operational performance of the Meat Hygiene Service are carried out by Veterinary Meat Hygiene Advisors of the Joint Food Standards and Safety Group. The auditors visit a selection of licensed premises to assess MHS compliance with the procedures and practices set out in the MHS Operations Manual and a report is published annually. This year the audit manual has been revised and changes made to report formats and the categorisation of findings.

The annual performance targets of the MHS are monitored independently by the Audit Consultancy and Management services Division of MAFF. I am fully satisfied with these arrangements.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria are used by veterinary officers of the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group during their routine audits of Meat Hygiene Service performance to assess the competence and performance of official veterinary surgeons. [88283]

Mr. Rooker: The audit staff of the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group assess the performance of official veterinary surgeons of the MHS against the procedures contained in the MHS Operations Manual.

Critical Control Points

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the definition of the term critical control point used in the hazard analysis and critical control points system; and how many critical control points there should be in (a) a typical slaughterhouse, (b) a red meat cutting plant and (c) a poultry processing plant operation; and at what stages in each operation. [88289]

Mr. Rooker: A critical control point is a step at which control can be applied and is essential to prevent or eliminate a food safety hazard or reduce it to an acceptable level.

Every food operation is unique and it is for each operator to apply the hazard analysis and critical control point system and determine critical control points appropriate to the business. The Government/Industry Working Group on Meat Hygiene's Forward Programmes provide some generic examples of critical control points relevant to the red and white meat industry.

EU Food and Veterinary Office

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if staffing of the European Union Food and Veterinary Office is allocated on the basis of national quotas; [88295]

(2) how many professional grade officials are employed by the European Union Food and Veterinary Office; and how many are (a) United Kingdom citizens, (b) qualified veterinarians and (c) qualified environmental health officers. [88221]

Mr. Rooker: This is a matter for the European Commission.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations (a) he and (b) his officials have made to the European Union Commission as to the composition of the EU Food and Veterinary Office. [88287]

Mr. Rooker: None.

Wild Boar

Sir Geoffrey JohnsonSmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce measures to protect the health status of the pig herd from the potential threat of colonies of free-living wild boar. [87958]

Mr. Rooker: We are considering options for an animal health risk assessment of wild boar. This will examine the potential for disease transmission or other interactions between wild boar and livestock and will help us consider whether action needs to be taken to limit or eradicate the population of wild boar.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will amend his Department's Fact Sheet issued in June 1999 on genetic modification of crops and food to incorporate the recommendations of the Chief Medical officer and the Chief Scientific Advisor on population health surveillance. [89056]

Mr. Rooker: Yes. The fact sheet has already been up-dated.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in national insurance contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88864]

Mr. Battle: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Department of Trade and Industry will depend on the rates of the climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is, therefore, not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on this Department.

Rover

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the criteria under which Government investment in Rover will be expected to meet best value. [88502]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) scheme from which the majority of the aid will be funded (£129 million) rigorously assesses the economic probity of aid and the ability of the potential investment to deliver value for money. In the Rover case the factors taken into account included:

Winning a significant investment of over £1 billion for the UK; safeguarding of many tens of thousands of jobs both at Rover and in the region as a whole;

Maintenance of Rover/Land Rover and their full R&D capability as an operational entity in the UK; enhancement of the UK's position in the global automotive market; and raising the skills and productivity levels within Rover and its suppliers.

Internal Market Council

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Internal Market Council held in Luxembourg on 21 June. [89805]

Mr. Byers: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe represented the UK at the Internal Market Council in Luxembourg on 21 June.

The Commission introduced an open debate on the future direction of the single market. There was general agreement on the need to define strategic objectives against which the development of the single market could be monitored and on the priority areas for action (including public procurement, electronic commerce and mutual recognition). The Scoreboard was confirmed as a tool for monitoring progress; the latest version showed that the deficit in the transposition of directives was being reduced.

The Commission reported on the progress of SLIM IV (Simpler Legislation in the Internal Market), the review of the SLIM initiative and the prospects for SLIM V. The Netherlands introduced a joint paper from the Netherlands, Denmark and the UK and there was agreement from other member states that there was a need for improvements to help realise the potential of SLIM.

The Council reached political agreement on the Orphan Drugs Regulation (which provides incentives for the development of drugs for the treatment of rare diseases) and Customs 2000, and agreed Conclusions on Tourism and Employment. With the exception of a Spanish Gibraltar-related reservation on the designation of competent authorities, there was unanimous political agreement on the substance of the Takeovers Directive, which included the text that the Government had sought dealing with the issue of litigation. There was no agreement on the new chocolate directive, despite a qualified majority in favour of the Presidency's compromise, because of Commission objections to the proposed comitology provisions.

The Commission introduced Communications on the Environment and the Internal Market and on Mutual Recognition. There was a brief debate on international exhaustion of trademark rights following a Commission presentation. The Council took note of progress reports on Standardisation; the Copyright and related rights in the Information Society Directive; the Electronic Commerce Directive; and the Commission's oral report on Counterfeiting and Piracy. The Council took note of a progress report on the reform of Customs Transit Systems and adopted a Resolution. The Commission announced the imminent publication of an amended proposal on Community Design.

Ministers discussed the Artists' Resale Right Directive. The Council agreed to give more time to discussions in order to find a solution to the remaining difficulties some member states have with the proposed directive.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the aerospace industry concerning research into new technologies; and if he will make a statement. [89537]

Mr. Battle: I am aware of the importance of technology to the aerospace industry and saw many examples of high-technology products on the stands of UK companies during my recent visit to the Paris Air Show. Under the Department's Civil Aircraft Research and Technology Demonstration (CARAD) Programme, DTI officials maintain a close dialogue with the industry in various fora about research into aeronautics technologies.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages to the British tourism industry of reducing the rate of VAT on (a) hotel rooms, (b) restaurants and (c) other tourist attractions. [88792]

Janet Anderson: I have no plans to assess areas of tax policy that are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I understand the industry has submitted views on this matter, which are being considered.

Historic Public Buildings

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what research his Department has commissioned on the condition of historic public buildings in urban parks. [88902]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Neither my Department nor the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have commissioned any such research. English Heritage's buildings at risk register contains information on all the grade I and II* listed buildings known to them to be 'at risk' through neglect and decay or vulnerable to becoming so.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to (a) discuss the protection of non-listed historic public buildings in urban parks with local authorities and (b) publish guidance on the conservation of non-listed historic public buildings in urban parks. [88903]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Neither my Department, nor the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has any such plans at present. Unlisted buildings in urban parks are in some cases likely to be covered by conservation area controls, guidance on which is included in Planning Policy Guidance Note 15: Planning and the Historic Environment.

Royal Parks Agency

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he intends to undertake a review of the Royal Parks Agency. [89802]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Royal Parks Agency (RPA) was established on 1 April 1993 as an Executive Agency of my Department with responsibility for managing and policing the Royal Parks in London and some other related areas.

I have today announced the start of our review of the Agency, which was postponed during the completion of the Comprehensive Spending Review. This will include an evaluation of its performance since launch and a review of the options for the best management of its functions. We aim to complete the review by the end of November 1999. A copy of the announcement has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Thameslink 2000

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give an estimated completion date for the Thameslink 2000 scheme; and what the implications are for the Crossrail project. [88738]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The current estimate for the start of Thameslink 2000 services is May 2006. There is nothing planned within the scope of the scheme which would prevent the introduction of the Crossrail project.

London Underground

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the current estimate is of the legal costs incurred to date by London Transport in the case of Mr. P. Marlow v London Underground Ltd. and the associated counter-claim. [88598]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground Ltd. has incurred legal fees amounting to £15,000 to date in defending proceedings commenced by Mr. Marlow and in pursuing a counterclaim against him.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to alleviate problems caused by the closure of the Circle Line. [88445]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport and I met the managing director of London Underground (LU) last week. He satisfied us that LU are operating additional services on the Hammersmith & City and Metropolitan Lines, along part of the route where Circle Line services usually run, and a normal District Line service along most of the rest of the Circle Line. All stations remain open. Additional buses are also running on routes 16, 23 and 52. Underground tickets and passes are valid on these buses. We have asked him to inform us immediately if this should change.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the potential for genetically modified terminator genes in plants to escape into the environment; and if he will make a statement. [88638]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Although 'terminator gene' technology has been patented in the United States of America, it has not been introduced into any crops. The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment is to set up a sub-group to advise on best practice in developing genetically modified plants. The sub group's work will include consideration of the environmental impact of 'terminator genes' and similar approaches. The sub group's findings will be published.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he supported the call by the Greek Government at the meeting of the EU Environment Council on 24 June for a temporary ban on new varieties of genetically modified crops and seeds pending the completion of the review of EU Directive 90/220; and if he will make a statement. [88875]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The UK Government did not support the call for suspension of releases pending the completion of the amendment to Directive 90–220 during the Luxembourg Environment Council. The UK and a number of other Member States were sceptical of the legal justification for such a moratorium and considered that rapid and effective revision of the current Directive should be the top priority in the negotiations.

The common position agreed in Luxembourg strengthens the existing Directive in a wide range of areas such as risk assessment and monitoring. Moreover, the safeguard clause will continue to apply, allowing Member States to take immediate action to suspend a release should evidence of harm emerge.

During the Environment Council, the Council Legal Service confirmed that a moratorium suspending application of the existing Directive would not be possible. This position was supported by the Commission. The Council Legal Service outlined some limited scope offered by Article 95 (5) of the Amsterdam Treaty which enabled Member States to derogate from harmonised legislation where specific environmental problems emerge. However, the UK took the view that agreement on strict new provisions for the amendment of Directive 90–220 should take priority over a moratorium of doubtful legality.

Asbestos

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the European Commission to ratify the decision of the Technical Committee to allow member states which have not already done so to impose restrictions on the importation of white asbestos and products that contain the material; and if he will make a statement. [89053]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The Government are determined to apply further necessary restrictions to the importation, marketing and use of white asbestos. I have received advice from the Health and Safety Commission about those new restrictions in the form of draft regulations. I will act on that advice as soon as the European Commission has ratified the vote of their technical committee to adapt to technical progress Council Directive 76/769/EEC. I am hopeful that this ratification will not be subject to any unnecessary delay. The UK continues to encourage the European Commission to act swiftly on this vitally important measure.

Car Parking Fines

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the average amount of revenue to be raised by local authorities for 1999–2000 from car parking fines. [89644]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information on local authority parking revenue from penalty charge notices and excess charge notices is not held centrally.

Council Tax

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has met the 12 local authorities he called in to discuss their increases in budget requirement and council tax; and if he will make a statement. [89803]

Ms Armstrong: On 13 April the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions announced his decision not to cap any authorities. However, he decided to call in twelve authorities with the largest increases in budget requirement and council tax to put them on warning for next year.

I have now met the representatives of these twelve authorities. The meetings have been constructive. We discussed why the authorities had made such large increases and I explained that when we look at the budgets for 2000–01 we will be able to take this year's increase into account. Most of the authorities have told us that they do not expect to make such large increases next year.

However, it is not only these authorities that will need to consider next year's increase carefully. All authorities should remember that, under the new reserve powers, the Government will be able to look back at increases over two years.

Vehicle Number Plates

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has any proposals for new regulations relating to vehicle number plates. [89804]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department expects to publish draft regulations relating to the display of vehicle number plates in the near future. We will consult widely on the proposals before any new regulations are made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sitting Hours

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, what services of the House are required to be available when the House is sitting on Tuesdays from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.; and how much could be saved if the House rose at 7 p.m. [88669]

Mr. Kirkwood: Most main facilities for Members are available whenever the House is sitting. It is not possible to quantify, in any meaningful way, savings for the hours indicated by the hon. Lady.

Braithwaite Report

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, when the House of Commons Commission is due to make a decision on the Braithwaite report; and how the report will be placed in the public domain. [88667]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission has received the Braithwaite report which it is now considering.

Portcullis House

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what assessment the Commission has received of the Portcullis House project; and if he will make a statement. [89516]

Mr. Kirkwood: In February the House of Commons Commission appointed Messrs Northcroft, Chartered Quantity Surveyors and Construction Consultants, to undertake a mid-term review of the Portcullis House project, including an analysis of changes in the cost; to consider whether the current cost estimate and timetable are realistic and whether there is a case for modifying any aspects of the project to reduce costs and improve value for money; and to provide any comparisons with other comparable buildings.

The report has now been received. Its key conclusion is that, when account is taken of the quality, the long lifespan of the building and other relevant factors, the building provides value for money for the House. Other main findings are that:

the project will be delivered within the budget and programme;

the project under construction closely reflects the scheme approved by the House in May 1993; and the team is totally committed to delivering the approved scheme.

While the report acknowledges that the cost of the project is high, it records that account has to be taken of the particular reasons and the quality of the building.

The report contains a number of detailed recommendations that Northcroft believe will help assure delivery within the programme and budget. These will now be considered and implemented as appropriate.

The Executive Summary of the report is available in the Vote Office. The full text of the Report has been deposited in the Library.

Good progress has continued to be made since the fieldwork for the report was undertaken in January and February, reinforcing the views of the consultants about the programme and budget. There is now every prospect of the work being completed three or four weeks in advance of the current programme and of the final cost being some £15 million below budget. The project team will explore opportunities for further improvements while they continue to strive to achieve a high quality building.

House of Lords

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has for the composition of the electoral college for cross-bench peers in the Interim House of Lords; and if she will make a statement. [89194]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government will establish an independent Appointments Commission to nominate cross-bench peers to the transitional House of Lords. We set out our proposals for membership of the Commission in our White Paper, "Modernising Parliament Reforming the House of Lords". The Commission will be an advisory non-departmental public body consisting of representatives of the three main political parties and a majority of independent figures, one of whom will be the Chairman. The party political representatives will be nominated by party leaders, and the independent members will be appointed in accordance with the rules of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Consulate, Skopje

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about the handling of visa applications at the British Consulate in Skopje; and if he will make a statement. [86841]

Mr. Hoon: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has given a commitment that the Embassy will begin issuing visas as soon as it is practicable for it to do so. We are looking at options for larger premises, to enable us to provide a full visa service. As regards the processing in Skopje of applications from Kosovar refugees, I refer the hon. Member to the statement in the House on 5 May 1999 by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, Official Report, columns 443–44, in which he outlined the arrangements being made under UNHCR auspices.

My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean will be replying separately to the hon. Member's letter of 8 June about a specific case in which he has an interest.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87319]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Between 15 April and 22 June, 107 parliamentary questions have been tabled to the Department for written answer on a named day; 66 per cent. received a substantive reply on that day.

Stability Pact

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1999, Official Report, column 255, relating to the publication of the Stability Pact for South East Europe, on which treaty article it is based; if it requires further European Union legislation for its operation; and what is the basis of the term pact being introduced into the affairs of the European Union and Community. [88682]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The EU agreed a Common Position on 17 May, the legal basis of which is article 15 of the Treaty on European Union, setting out the general objectives for the Stability Pact initiative. The Stability Pact for South East Europe, approved by the participants' Foreign Ministers on 10 June, is not itself a legal instrument of the European Union, although the European Union will play the leading role within the initiative. In the light of this, there may be a requirement for a Joint Action to meet future operational costs. There is no generic basis for the use within the EU of the term pact.

Gough Island

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the Government's current arrangements for monitoring fishing in the marine area around Gough Island which forms part of the Wildlife Reserve; and what arrangements he makes for the conservation according to World Heritage Values. [87488]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 29 June 1999]: A fisheries patrol vessel, based on the island of Tristan Da Cunha, was provided to Tristan Da Cunha by the British Government in 1996. It is based on the island of Tristan Da Cunha and does not have the range to patrol Gough Island coastal waters. The only vessels that monitor fishing in the area around Gough Island are those of the Tristan lobster fishing concessionaire, Premier Fishing. All Premier Fishing vessels carry a Tristanian Government observer when fishing in the waters of the Tristan Da Cunha group. Each observer is also a designated conservation officer under the terms of the Tristan Da Cunha Conservation Ordinance 1976.

Gough Island was declared a World Heritage Site in 1995. The area covered by this designation includes the island itself and the marine area out to three nautical miles. Gough Island has a strict Wildlife Management Plan in place. An Environmental Inspector is annually appointed and sent to the Island to ensure that the Plan is being adhered to, and to make recommendations for improvements to it.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates during the past 12 months a fisheries patrol vessel has been operating within three nautical miles of Gough Island for the purpose of monitoring fisheries; and what reports it has furnished to HMG. [87489]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 29 June 1999]: No fisheries patrol vessel has operated within three nautical miles of Gough Island for the purpose of monitoring fisheries in the past twelve months.

Wideawake Airfield, Ascension Island

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will require the United States Government to pay commercial rates for any use of Wideawake Airfield on Ascension Island for civil charter flights. [88635]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 29 June 1999]: We currently have no plans to charge the United States for the use of Wideawake Airfield on Ascension Island.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensions Agency

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals against decisions of the War Pensions Agency have been (a) submitted and (b) successful in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [88223]

Mr. Bayley: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Year	Assessment	Entitlement
Number of appeals lodged
1995–96	4,920	3,064
1996–97	5,282	3,883
1997–98	4,694	3,336
1998–99	1,440	1,189
Successful appeals cleared by pensions appeal tribunals [1]
1995–96	722	1,388
1998–99	983	1,179

[1] The second part of the table relates solely to successful claims cleared by the Pensions Appeals Tribunals. Due to the time taken to process appeals, they are not necessarily decided in the same year as that in which they are lodged. Figures of appeals lodged and decided in a particular year do not therefore necessarily relate to the same appeal.

Note:

War Pensions appeals fall into 2 broad categories:

Entitlement—Those where the issue is whether the claimed disablement or death is related to service in HM Forces.

Assessment—Those where the issue is the degree of disablement which is due to service. The higher the degree of disablement, the higher the rate of war disablement pensions awarded.

Incapacity Benefit (ME)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for figures to be provided in future for the numbers of people who suffer from myalgic encephalomyelitis as a separate category when collecting statistics on benefits. [88594]

Mr. Bayley: Although individual diagnosis codes are available, they are not shown in the quarterly publication. There are in the region of a thousand different codes, therefore only "group headings" are shown. There are no plans to include individual codes within the quarterly publication.

The latest figures held show that at 30 November 1998 there were 16,000 claimants of Incapacity Benefit where the diagnosis was shown as Myalgic Encephalomyelitis, Chronic Fatigue Syndrome or Post Viral Fatigue Syndrome.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis falls into the group Diseases of the Nervous System (G00-G99) category.

Notes:

1. The figure is taken from a 5 per cent. scan of the benefit computer system, and excludes a small number of cases held clerically.

2. Diagnosis codes are taken from the International Classification of Diseases, tenth edition.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to Housing Benefit relating to (a) Local Authority rents, (b) Housing Association rents and (c) private sector rents for the last year for which statistics are available. [88819]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is in the table.

Housing Benefit expenditure in Great Britain: 1997–98

	£ million, cash
Local Authority tenants	5,493
Registered Social Landlord tenants (previously Housing Association tenants)	2,211
Private Rented Sector tenants	3,480
Total Housing Benefit	11,184

Note:
'Rents' have been interpreted as referring to 'tenants'
Source:
1997–98 Housing Benefit Subsidy claim forms from Local Authorities, together with information from the Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit Management Information System one per cent. samples for May 1997 and May 1998. The figures vary slightly from those in the Departmental Report because more recent Local Authorities' data have been incorporated in these figures.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases the CSA is currently dealing with and how many were wrongly assessed in the last year for which figures are available; [89052]

(2) how much (a) compensation has been paid to clients and (b) arrears have been removed from clients' cases by the CSA, for excessive delay in processing cases (i) since its establishment and (ii) in the last year for which figures are available. [89051]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Michael Clapham, dated 30 June 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

At the end of 1998/99 year the Agency was dealing with 923,960 live and assessed cases.

One of the targets that the Secretary of State set the Agency for 1998/99 was that the cash value of all assessments checked throughout the full year was to be correct in at least 75% of cases. The Agency exceeded this target, with the cash value of 77% of the assessments checked being correct to the last penny.

In April 1995 a scheme was introduced to encourage future compliance by non-resident parents in certain cases by deferring arrears which had accrued due to processing delays by the Agency. Provided the non-resident parent complies with the maintenance assessment for 52 weeks, he is only held liable for the latest six months of the arrears. Where the parent with care suffers financial loss as a result of this arrangement the balance is paid by the Agency as compensation.

In April 1997 the Agency began to clear the backlog of approximately 495,000 cases that had been awaiting assessment for over 52 weeks, and are eligible for the scheme. That backlog has now been reduced to about 47,000 at 31 March 1999—324,859 were cleared during 1998/99.

From the commencement of the scheme until the end of the March 1999 a total of £2,180K has been paid as compensation to parents with care, with £1,297K being paid in the 1998/99 year.

Non-resident parents have had a total of £18.32M of their arrears deferred under this scheme, with £6.6M being deferred in the 1998/99 year.

The figures provided for the 1998/99 year are indicative amounts and have yet to be audited and agreed by the National Audit Office. They may, therefore, be subject to change.

The Agency's Annual Report and Accounts 1998/99 is due to be published next month and I will arrange to send you a copy shortly after issue.

I hope that you find this reply helpful.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the benefits for which he is able to provide regional and national breakdowns of number of recipients. [89076]

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Research Grants

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was awarded (a) in total and (b) to each higher education establishment in the form of research grants in each year since 1995. [88830]

Mr. Mudie: The Higher Education Statistics Agency annual volume "Resources of Higher Education Institutions" contains the data requested. The relevant volumes are already available in the Library.

New Deal

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have been sanctioned under the New Deal to date (i) in each of the New Deal geographical units of delivery, (ii) for the gateway and (iii) for each of the four options. [89021]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The following table shows the stage in New Deal when sanctions have been applied to participants, split by Employment Service region and gender, up to the end of May 1999.

A breakdown of the reasons for sanctions are: Gateway, those sanctioned for failure to attend an adviser interview; Options, those sanctioned for refusal, failure to attend or misconduct on any of the New Deal Options; Other, those New Deal participants sanctioned or disallowed for any other reason.

Primary School Pupils

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 April 1999, Official Report, column 381, if he will list the money spent per primary age pupil (a) from local education authorities, (b) from central Government and (c) in total (i) in 1996–97, (ii) in 1997–98 and (iii) in 1998–99 for each local education authority ranked in descending order of total spend in 1998–99. [89113]

Ms Estelle Morris: In my reply to my hon. Friend's earlier question to which he refers, I explained that information for 1998–99 in the form in which it was requested was not yet available, and the situation is unchanged. I will write to my hon. Friend when the figures he requests are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Grammar Schools

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many local referenda are being held to establish public opinion on the future of grammar schools; and if he will publish a list showing the dates of the referenda and the areas involved. [88946]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 29 June 1999]: No referenda are being held at the moment. It is a matter for local parents to decide whether or not they want any such ballots in the future.

School Premises (Community Use)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to encourage greater use of school premises by the community out of school hours. [89341]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department will be publishing guidance later this year on developing school—community links—including the use of premises. The 'Schools Plus Team' is following up the Social Exclusion Unit's report 'Bringing Britain Together' and is considering how schools can make their facilities available to more people.

Beacon Schools

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if schools rejected for Beacon Status are given reasons for the rejection. [89283]

Ms Estelle Morris: The procedure for selecting Beacon schools is completely open and details are published on the DfEE website. Any school rejected for Beacon Status is given an explanation.

School Admissions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect on school admissions of the practice of posting OFSTED reports on the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [89284]

Ms Estelle Morris: No assessment has yet been made. We are commissioning research into parents' experience of recent changes in legislation on school admissions and the information that parents use when deciding the type and place of education for their child. We expect to have results from this research in approximately 18 months to two years.

Shire Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the percentage of total spending devoted to education for each shire authority; and how much extra each would have to spend in order to spend as much on education as the present highest one for the latest year for which figures are available. [89286]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information for the financial year 1999–2000 is in the process of preparation and is expected to be completed shortly. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures he requests are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on administrative support to the Territorial Army following the recent reforms. [89847]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following the announcement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence on the restructuring of the TA in November 1998 detailed work has been carried out to establish the level of administrative support required by the reformed TA. As it is our intention to make the TA more relevant, more usable and more fully integrated into the regular armed forces, we have concluded that the level of administrative support needs to be tailored to the readiness of the unit involved. Accordingly, the overall level of administrative support staff is being reduced broadly in line with the reduction in TA personnel and some units will receive an increased level of support. Altogether this will mean that there will be a net loss of some 600 civilian jobs nationally. MOD Trades Unions have been fully consulted about the implications for civilian staff and have raised a number of concerns, which are being addressed. My officials will now be working closely with the Trades Unions to ensure that the process of implementing the new TA structure is handled as sensitively as possible.

Depleted Uranium Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total stock of depleted uranium weaponry held by the UK. [88889]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding the detailed information under exemption 1a of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations. Depleted uranium-based ammunition is used because it offers better performance than other alternatives and, therefore, gives our Armed Forces greater operational capability.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many depleted uranium weapons are held by British forces based in Albania, Macedonia and Kosovo. [88963]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding this information under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate how much depleted uranium was dropped on (a) Kosovo and (b) Serbia in the course of recent NATO action. [89067]

Mr. George Robertson: The UK did not use depleted uranium (DU) ammunition during the air campaign over Kosovo and Serbia. The United States is the only member of the Alliance to have said that it used DU ammunition. I am not in a position to estimate the amount used.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

CPS/Police Collaboration

30. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Attorney-General what progress he has made on improving collaboration between the Crown Prosecution Service and area police forces in order to reduce delays before cases are brought to court. [87909]

The Attorney-General: Measures designed to bring cases to court within a few days of charge, including provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and the location of CPS staff at police stations, have been tested at six pilot sites. Initial indications are that the pilots have worked well and, subject to a satisfactory evaluation, the measures will be implemented in the rest of England and Wales in November 1999. Moreover, most CPS Areas and police forces now operate fast-tracking arrangements for a range of casework. Fast-tracking has greatly reduced the time from charge to first appearance, from four or five weeks to a matter of days.

Racial Hatred Prosecutions

31. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Attorney-General pursuant to his answer of 20 May 1999, Official Report, column 433, on prosecutions for racial hatred, how many referrals were made to him by the Director of Public Prosecutions for consideration as to whether to prosecute for incitement to racial hatred in each year since 1995. [87910]

The Solicitor-General: Since 1995 the Director of Public Prosecutions has referred 36 cases which involved allegations of offences under Part III of the Public Order Act 1986 to my office. In 31 cases consent to prosecution was given, in three cases consent was not granted; and the Director withdrew the application for consent in the remaining two cases.

Crown Prosecution Service

32. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the implementation of the restructuring of the Crown Prosecution Service areas. [87911]

The Attorney-General: The new structure of 42 Crown Prosecution Service Areas was implemented in April 1999 when the newly appointed 42 Chief Crown Prosecutors took up their posts. On 28 June 1999, I provided the final Government response to the recommendations contained in Sir Iain Glidewell's report on the CPS. Sixty-four of the 75 recommendations have now been accepted, accepted in part or in principle, or implemented. Only two recommendations have been rejected. Work continues on the implementation of what is a substantial initiative within the criminal justice system.

Charities

33. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his responsibilities in relation to charities. [87912]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General's responsibilities in relation to charities are historic and wide-ranging. The Attorney-General's function is to represent the Crown as parens patriae and so to act as protector, both of charity in general and of particular charities. It falls to the Attorney-General to institute legal proceedings to protect a charity and to represent the charitable interest. The Attorney-General is a necessary party to any litigation in which the objects of a charity need to be separately represented, for example, where the interest of the Trustees do not coincide with the objects of the charity.

In addition, the Attorney-General has the power to authorise ex gratia payments from charitable funds on moral grounds where such payments might otherwise amount to breaches of trust and he has power, by derogation from the Sovereign, to give directions under the Sign Manual as to the re-distribution of uncertain charitable gifts under wills.

Lenient Sentences (Appeals)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General in how many cases he has sought leave to appeal against sentences on grounds of alleged leniency. [87906]

The Attorney-General: Since 1 May 1997 in England and Wales 197 individual references have been lodged with the Court of Appeal. 81.6 per cent. of the references heard have resulted in an increased sentence.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Aloyzas Balsys

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the (a) US and (b) Lithuanian authorities in connection with allegations of war crimes by Mr. Aloyzas Balsys; and if he will make a statement. [88329]

Mr. Boateng: I am arranging for the relevant records to be examined, and will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88476]

Kate Hoey: The information requested for the period since 1 July 1998 is given in the table. Attendance from the Home Office was usually by one or two officials of around grade 7 level, with members of the United Kingdom Permanent Representation to the European Union and officials of other Government Departments as necessary.

Working group	Number of meetings
Visa Working Group	10
Working Party on Economic Questions (Data Protection)	7
Regulators Group (Building and Construction Materials)[1]	4
Standing Committee on Construction (Construction Products Directive)[1]	3
Article 10 (Precursor Chemicals) Committee	3
Working Group on Posting of Third-Country National Workers[2]	3

Eurodac Working Group[2]	1
Contact Committee on Money Laundering	1
DGXV officials group on transfer of information at the European Parliamentary elections 1999	1

[1] Since the coming into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam on 1 May
[2] Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions DETR lead Department

In addition, several Working Groups convened under the auspices of Title VI of the Treaty on European Union met on a number of occasions during the period in question.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates special advisers from his Department have travelled to the United States of America on official business since 1 May 1997; which of his special advisers took part in these visits; and if he will list the meetings which these special advisers held with members and officials of the US Government during the visits, specifying the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the US minister and officials at each meeting. [88435]

Mr. Straw: There has only been one such occasion. On 4 February 1998, Lord Warner accompanied me on a visit to Washington. He did not hold any meetings of his own but did attend meetings I had with the National Institute of Justice, the Department of Justice and Attorney-General Janet Reno in Washington. Lord Warner also accompanied me to meetings I had in Baltimore with the Director of International Programmes, Office of Mayor Schmoke, representatives of the Circuit Court of Baltimore and the Baltimore City Police Department.

Racism

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that police data on racial harassment and racially motivated crime are documented on the same basis by all police forces. [88911]

Mr. Boateng: Until recently, all forces recorded racial incidents under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident:

> "Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation; or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

The Stephen Lawrence Inquiry recommended that these incidents are referred to as "racist incidents" and that a simpler and clearer definition should be used:

> "A racist incident is any incident which is perceived to be racist by the victim or any other person".

This was adopted by all police forces on 28 April 1999.

A breakdown of the number of racist incidents recorded by the police in each police area in 1997–98 is given in the Home Office publication "Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System 1998", a copy of which is in the Library. The new definition will be incorporated into the Notes for Guidance 1999–2000 to forces on collecting this data.

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced new offences for racial crime which came into force on 30 September 1998. These correspond to the existing main offences which deal with violence against the person (except those which carry a maximum sentence of life imprisonment), criminal damage and offences of harassment. They relate to cases in which there was either racial motivation or any aggravating evidence of racial hostility in connection with the offence and provide the courts with higher maximum penalties to reflect the racial aspect to the crime. These are separate criminal offences in law and will be identified as such at all stages of the criminal justice system.

The Association of Chief Police Officers issued a good practice guide on the police response to racial incidents in April 1998. The guide sets out clear policy and procedures for dealing with racist incidents. The guide has been reviewed and a new manual will be issued by December 1999.

The Association of Chief Police Officers has recently produced a report on the Reporting and Recording of Racist Incidents which identified the minimum data content that the police should collect on racist incidents, sets out a method for tracking them throughout the criminal justice system, and makes recommendations for future data collection and monitoring systems. This has been adopted by police forces in principle, subject to the Information Technology implications being looked at in further detail.

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has take to ensure that the data gathered by local race relations councils under the Commission for Racial Equality on racial harassment are comparable and gathered in the same way. [88912]

Mr. Boateng: Local race equality councils are not required to record racist incidents and practice may vary.

The Government have accepted recommendations 15–17 of the Lawrence Inquiry which deal with the reporting of racist incidents by the police, local authorities and other relevant organisations. The Government are taking forward these recommendations through the Racist Incidents Standing Committee (RISC), on which the Commission for Racial Equality is represented.

RISC will develop a code of practice for use by all relevant agencies, including standard reporting and recording arrangements, by April 2000. It will be used to record race equality comments.

Elections for Trial

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact that plea before venue has had on elections for trial. [88927]

Mr. Boateng: As expected, section 49 of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 ('plea before venue') had led to a decrease in the number of persons committed to the Crown Court for trial. This decrease has been apparent both in those cases which are directed there by the magistrates, and in those where the defendant elects to be tried in the Crown Court. The proportion of cases reaching the Crown Court by way of election, which fell steadily from 53 per cent. to 28 per cent. in the 10 years 1987–97, remained at 28 per cent. in 1998, the first full year in which plea before venue was in operation.

Police Discipline Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 101, on the proceedings relating to the dismissal of police officers, if he will publish The Independent Tribunal's reasons and their recommendation. [88940]

Kate Hoey: We will consider disclosing recommendations made by police discipline appeals tribunals, on request and after the parties have been informed. However, to disclose a tribunal's reasons would mean making public details of the case of an individual who has appealed against an internal police personnel discipline decision. Because of the unfairness which could arise from disclosing such details, it is not the practice of the Home Office to publish tribunals' reasons. Copies of tribunal reports to the Home Secretary are sent to appellants and respondents, and it is open to them to consider whether they wish to disclose further details.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 420, when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a substantive reply to his letter of 27 April regarding a constituent. [88814]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 29 June.

Prison Planning Application (Peterborough)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department first considered the possibility of building a prison in Peterborough constituency; and which Minister evaluated the proposal. [89191]

Mr. Straw: The suitability of the site of the former Rockwell/APV works in Peterborough was brought to the attention of the Prison Service in October 1996 and was first visited by Prison Service officials in early November 1996. The then Minister of State responsible for prisons and probation, my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin) approved the submission of a formal planning proposal in June 1997. Information relating to whether and when Ministers of the previous administration considered any matter is quite properly not available to Ministers of the present government.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what local consultation took place at the time the building of a prison in the Peterborough constituency was first considered; and what consultation there was with the local Member at the time. [89192]

Mr. Straw: Prison Service officials' first meeting with Peterborough City Council's planning officers took place on 18 April 1997: a second meeting was held on 8 May 1997. I briefed my hon. Friend in June 1997, following the decision by my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), the then Minister of State responsible for prisons and probation, that the Prison Service should submit a formal planning application.

Foreign Contracts (Bribes)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for the use of bribes to secure foreign contracts have been brought in England and Wales in the last five years. [87913]

Mr. Boateng: Offences of bribery to secure foreign contracts are either prosecuted under the Prevention of Corruption Acts 1906 and 1916, or under the common law offence of bribery. The table shows the total number of defendants proceeded against in England and Wales for offences under this legislation. The Home Office Court Proceedings Database, from which these figures are drawn, does not identify the specific nature of the offence such as bribery to secure foreign contracts.

Number of defendants proceeded against for offences under the Prevention of Corruption Acts 1906 and 1916 or the Common Law Offence of Bribery, England and Wales, 1993–97

E-commerce

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he has to link the licensing of trusted third parties with key escrow in e-commerce communications; [R] [89334]

(2) what is his policy towards key escrow in e-commerce communications; [R] [89333]

(3) what new powers he proposes to give police and the security services to gain access to encrypted computer files; [R] [89336]

(4) what plans he has to control encryption in e-commerce communications. [R] [89335]

Mr. Straw: There will be no mandatory link between key escrow and being an approved provider of cryptography services under the proposed e-commerce legislation. Approved providers will be free to offer those cryptographic services required by their clients. These may, for good business reasons, include the storage of their clients' encryption keys. Encryption technologies are vital for instilling trust in e-commerce transactions and the Government do not propose to control their legitimate use. The same technologies, can, however, also be put to criminal use. In response to this threat, the Government intend to provide the law enforcement, security and intelligence agencies with new powers to require any person, upon service of a properly authorised written notice, to produce specified material in an intelligible form or to disclose relevant material (for example a decryption key) necessary to render it intelligible. The legislation will contain strong safeguards and the powers will only apply to material which is, or has been, lawfully obtained.

Internet (Police Access)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to encourage greater use of the internet by police authorities for publicising details of (a) wanted criminals and (b) missing persons. [R] [89337]

Mr. Boateng: The police service is aware of the potential benefits of the internet to its work. I understand that the Metropolitan and Hertfordshire forces have, in fact, set up an internet site with details of missing children on a pilot basis. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) is currently considering how the internet may best be used. A national information management strategy has been prepared and will shortly be proposed for adoption across the service. A number of forces already have websites. A summary of police force websites can be found at www.wypbcm.demon.co.uk.

CABINET OFFICE

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the policy issues which have been discussed by the Joint Consultative Committee which are the responsibility of the devolved administrations in (i) Scotland and (ii) Wales. [87344]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Details of the proceedings of the Joint Consultative Committee are exempt from disclosure under the internal discussion and advice exemption of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the estimated cost is of servicing the Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee. [88836]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: No separate costs for the servicing of the Joint Consultative Committee are identified.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what date his Department was first informed that Parts IV A and IV B of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 were no longer in force. [88793]

Mr. Kilfoyle: On 23 June 1999.

WALES

Oncologists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many clinical and medical oncologists are employed per head of population in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [87868]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on NHS medical and dental staff is collected annually as at 30 September. The latest available information relates to September 1997 and is given in the following table.

Staff in post at 30 September (excluding locums) per 1,000,000 population

	Consultants		All grades
	Number	Wte [1]	Number	Wte [1]
Medical oncology	0.3	0.3	0.7	0.4
Clinical oncology	5.8	4.7	12.6	10.5

[1] Whole-time equivalent.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue has been devolved to the National Assembly for Wales.

Social Service Departments

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate for each local authority social service department in Wales the cost of funding the discharge from hospital of patients of pensionable age who are currently medically fit to be discharged but are in need of respite care; and if he will make a statement. [88172]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The cost of discharging patients to other forms of care would depend on the nature of the care required and for how long it was required. Such details of the care packages of individual patients are not collected centrally.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue has been devolved to the National Assembly for Wales.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his responsibilities following the establishment of the Assembly Cabinet. [86340]

Mr. Michael: Following the transfer of power at midnight on Wednesday, 30 June, my functions as Secretary of State for Wales will be:

Functions relating to my membership of the UK Government

Responsibility to ensure that the interests of Wales are fully considered in the workings of the UK Government

Responsibility to steer primary legislation relating to Wales through Parliament

Functions relating to the fact that this House will vote the Main Estimate to the Secretary of State for Wales, who will make a grant to the Assembly after deducting the cost of running his own office

Responsibility to consult the Assembly on the Government's legislative programme

Responsibility to ensure that the arrangements for co-operation between the Assembly and the UK Government are working effectively.

All other functions of the Secretary of State for Wales transfer to the Assembly. It may be helpful for the House to know the way the provisions of the Government of Wales Act 1998 are being put into practice. The Assembly has delegated responsibilities to me as First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales. Onward delegation to my Assembly Cabinet has enabled us to create a positive and dynamic relationship between my Assembly Cabinet and other Subject Committees which mirror the portfolios of Assembly Secretaries. I am placing in the Library a copy of the Assembly papers relating to the responsibilities of the Assembly Secretaries and the intended way to deal with cross-cutting issues.

TREASURY

Financial Stability Forum

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who is representing Her Majesty's Government on the Financial Stability Forum working groups on short-term capital flows, highly leveraged institutions and offshore financial centres. [87684]

Ms Hewitt: The UK representatives on these groups are Paul Tucker (Deputy Director, Bank of England), on the short-term capital flows group; Howard Davies (Chairman, Financial Services Authority), who is chairing the highly leveraged institutions group; and Joseph Halligan (Head of International Financial Services team, HM Treasury) on the offshore financial centres group.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that the UK representatives to the Financial Stability Forum working groups on short-term capital flows, highly leveraged institutions and offshore financial centres consult with international development non-Governmental organisations in the UK. [87685]

Ms Hewitt: We would welcome views from international development non-governmental organisations and any other groups or individuals interested in the work of the Financial Stability Forum working groups. These should be sent to the UK representatives on the groups: Howard Davies (Chairman, Financial Services Authority), who is chairing the highly leveraged institutions group; Paul Tucker (Deputy Director, Bank of England), on the short-term capital flows group; and Joseph Halligan (Head of International Financial Services team, HM Treasury) on the offshore financial centres group.

Refrigerants

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce (a) economic and (b) fiscal instruments to reduce HFC emissions in the refrigeration market sector. [87688]

Ms Hewitt: Under the Kyoto Protocol the UK is committed to a legally binding target of a 12.5 per cent. reduction in greenhouse gas emissions below 1990 levels by 2008–12. The Government will be consulting later this year on the policy options for achieving our emissions targets, including options for reducing HFC emissions.

During 1996 and 1997, the Government negotiated five voluntary agreements with the various industry sectors including the refrigeration industry, to limit both use and emissions of HFCs. Under current policies HFC emissions are expected to fall by a substantial amount. The latest projections show that HFCs will contribute only around 1 per cent. of total UK greenhouse gas emissions, calculated in terms of the global warming contribution, by 2010.

World Bank (Social Principles)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on incorporating the social principles drafted by the World bank into the decision-making of (a) the IMF, (b) the World bank and (c) the United Kingdom. [87884]

Ms Hewitt: The World bank is currently working with the IMF to translate the draft social principles discussed at the Development Committee in April into good practices in social policy when designing adjustment programmes.

The good practices in social policy will help promote long-term growth and greater prosperity; and the need for equality of opportunity to ensure that everyone has access to the benefits of, and is able to contribute towards, this growth and prosperity.

As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made clear in his Mansion House speech earlier this month, the Government have put in place policies for a modern successful economy to ensure employment opportunity and greater prosperity for all in the years ahead, and which is therefore fully compatible with the principles and good practice in social policy.

Financial Crises

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the United Kingdom's policy on the conditions to be attached to future financial contributions towards remedying the financial crises and preventing future ones in (a) Brazil and (b) elsewhere. [87883]

Ms Hewitt: Financial tensions in Brazil have eased significantly, following the IMF-led international financial support package agreed last year. The conditions attached to the UK's contributions to this support package are those of the programme as a whole and the UK Government will continue to play an active role in monitoring Brazil's performance under the programme. Continued adherence under the IMF programme, together with an appropriate contribution from private sector creditors, underpins the BIS co-ordinated credit line, to which the UK has also contributed.

The UK Government have played their part, most recently at the G7 Summit on 18 June, to ensure that future packages to which the UK contributes are as effective as possible. Commitments which were made at the Summit to help achieve this included promoting the involvement of the private sector in crisis resolution; ensuring that the poor and vulnerable are better protected from the burden of adjustment in times of crisis; and greater transparency in the way in which the International Financial Institutions operate.

Foreign Currency Borrowings (Taxation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the (i) advantages and (ii) disadvantages of the imposition by the UK of taxation upon borrowings in foreign currencies by UK domestic companies; what discussions he has had on such proposals in respect of other countries vulnerable to currency stocks in relevant international economic forums; if he will estimate the taxation income for the United Kingdom of a 1 per cent. tax rate; and if he will make a statement. [88327]

Ms Hewitt: During the wide consultations which have been carried out to forge a consensus on necessary reforms to the international financial system, consideration has been given to a range of proposals for taxation of foreign currency transactions. Such proposals raise a number of practical difficulties which we have considered but do not believe could be overcome. Similarly, it would be extremely difficult to determine robust estimates of the revenue yield, which could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Single Currency

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) the Inland Revenue, (b) Customs and Excise and (c) HM Treasury have incurred expenditure on (i) extra staff, (ii) acquisition of accommodation, (iii) development of IT systems and (iv) the acquisition of supplies in preparation for possible United Kingdom entry to the European single currency; and if he will make a statement. [88748]

Ms Hewitt: Inland Revenue, Customs and Excise and HM Treasury's Euro Preparations Unit have worked to ensure that UK business and public authorities were ready for the introduction of the euro in 11 other European Union countries on 1 January 1999. There is a continuing need to provide UK business with the information that they need to help them remain competitive in this new European business environment. In line with the Government's stated position that the public sector will take a lead in planning, departments have also been considering the implications of possible UK entry to the European Single Currency. This work has been part of the normal business of departments and to date changeover work has not involved expenditure on extra staff, accommodation or the development of IT systems.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of public funds to be spent on preparing for the possibility of UK entry into the single currency before a referendum. [88907]

Ms Hewitt: The cost of euro preparations would depend on the detailed approach that the UK took to the changeover. Where computer systems are being upgraded, all departments will build in euro compatibility where that represents value for money. In the case of the DSS, the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise, the scale and complexity of their computer systems makes advance preparations critical. Prior to a referendum they may therefore need to spend up to some tens of millions of pounds, spread over a number of years to make their IT systems euro-compatible, so that we can maintain the flexibility for Britain to make the changeover as quickly and cost effectively as possible if that is what Government, Parliament and the people decide.

Provisions were therefore included in the Finance Bill and the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill which will provide specific statutory authority for this spending. Expenditure will be voted by Parliament in the normal way.

Employment (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 464, how many people are currently employed in the Shrewsbury and Atcham local authority district. [89048]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 1 July 1999:

In the absence of the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number of people employed in the Shrewsbury and Atcham local authority district.

There are two sources of employment information at local authority district level.

The latest available estimate is from the 1997/98 Labour Force Survey (LFS) Local Authority Database (LADB), covering the period March 97—February 98. This shows that 47,000 people living in Shrewsbury and Atcham were in employment. The LFS is a sample survey covering around 96,000 households annually, or some 184,000 adults.

Your recent question on employment was answered on 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 464. It used the Annual Employment Survey (AES), from which the number of Employee Jobs at September 1997 was given in the reply. The AES sample is drawn from the Inter-Departmental Business Register (IDBR). In 1997 it comprised 105,000 enterprises, covering half a million workplaces and 15.5 million employees (out of a total population of roughly 23 million employee jobs).

Although the AES has a larger sample size, the LFS gives more complete coverage. The LFS includes employees, self-employed, unpaid family workers and those on government employment training programmes.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the revenue generated by stamp duty arose from duty charged on the purchase of commercial land and property in the last year for which figures are available. [88828]

Ms Hewitt: The requested information is given in the table.

1998–99[1] (Provisional)

	Net receipts £ billion	Proportion of net receipts Percentage[1]
Stamp duty (including stamp duty reserve tax) on transaction in shares and other securities	2.5	55
Stamp duty on:
Residential transactions	1.2	25
Commercial property and land transactions	0.9	20
Total	4.6	100

[1] Proportions rounded to nearest 5 per cent.

Bank of England Loans

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) number and (b) total value in sterling of (i) secured and (ii) unsecured loans made by the Bank of England during the last two years; and if he will make a statement on the Bank's status as lender of last resort. [88919]

Ms Hewitt: The Bank makes loans in the normal course of its operations and these are described in its 1999 Annual Report. In its capacity as lender of last resort, the Bank of England has made no new loans, either secured or unsecured, over the last two years.

The Bank's role in the field of financial stability is described in a Memorandum of Understanding between HM Treasury, the Bank and the Financial Services Authority, which was published in October 1997.

Economic Convergence

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evaluation he has made of the structural divergence of the British economy with the economies of the rest of the EU. [88843]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury's assessment of the Chancellor's five economic tests was published in October 1997.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evaluation he has made of the cyclical convergence of the British economy with those of North America. [88842]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's evaluation of the cyclical convergence of the British economy with those of North America is contained in the Treasury's assessment of the five economic tests, published at the time of the Chancellor's statement on EMU in October 1997.

Gold Reserves

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much gold was held in the UK Exchange Equalisation Account on (a) 6 May and (b) 6 June; and in each case what was its value. [88826]

Ms Hewitt: A breakdown of the size and composition of the United Kingdom's reserve holdings is published in Table 2 of the Quarterly Report on UK Official Holdings of Foreign Currency and Gold.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the value of the Exchange Equalisation Account following the proposed sale of gold and relative to its value at 6 May. [88825]

Ms Hewitt: As the proceeds from the programme of auctions of gold will be invested in foreign currency assets and retained in the reserves, the asset base of the Exchange Equalisation Account will remain roughly the same.

A breakdown of the size and composition of the United Kingdom's reserve holdings is published in Table 2 of the Quarterly Report on UK Official Holdings of Foreign Currency and Gold.

Landfill Tax

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total landfill tax raised from disposals within Scotland in each financial year since the introduction of the tax; what proportion of the tax in each year has been retained by the Treasury as general taxation; and what proportion is allocated to environmental trusts. [89074]

Ms Hewitt: Figures relating to landfill tax are not available for separate countries or regions within the UK. This is due to the method of collection of the tax, where each landfill operator is registered according to the location of their head office.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue his Department has received from the levy of landfill tax in Wales in each of the last five years. [89061]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Figures relating to landfill tax are not available for separate countries or regions within the UK. This is due to the method of collection of the tax, where each landfill operator is registered according to the location of their head office.

Insurance Intermediaries

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for regulation of intermediaries dealing in general insurance. [89460]

Ms Hewitt: As the former Economic Secretary my hon. Friend the Member for Airdrie and Shotts (Mrs. Liddell) announced on 27 July 1998, Official Report, columns 23–24, the Financial Services and Markets Bill, now before the House, will provide for the repeal of the Insurance Brokers (Registration) Act 1977. Subject to the approval of Parliament, this will end the statutory status of the Insurance Brokers Registration Council (IBRC). The Joint Committee on Financial Services and Markets' recent report on the draft Bill supported this approach.

I am grateful to the current IBRC members for their work in continuing to serve on the Council in the interests of the insurance broking community during the present transitional period. To assist them in that task, I have today, under existing powers, nominated three new members to fill vacancies on the Council, to serve until the Council's statutory status ends:

Ronald Armstrong OBE

Bryan Lincoln

Dr. Oonagh McDonald CBE.

I am pleased that, since my right hon. Friend's announcement, the insurance industry, including general insurance intermediaries, has risen to the challenge she outlined. A broad-based range of support has developed for the General Insurance Standards Council (GISC), a new voluntary body to promote high standards of professional conduct among general insurance intermediaries.

The GISC is committed to strengthening industry standards and developing general insurance intermediaries' services to the public in all parts of the market. It plans to complement the statutory responsibilities of the Financial Services Authority (FSA) while stripping away unnecessary regulatory requirements on general insurance intermediaries. The GISC has gathered support with impressive speed. If it can fulfil its promise, it will provide valuable services to both general insurance intermediaries and their customers.

There may in future be a case for statutory regulation of general insurance intermediaries. If so, the Financial Services and Markets Bill contains a provision which would enable the Treasury to specify regulated activity, and to give regulatory responsibility to the FSA. For the moment, I have no plans to specify advice on general insurance as a regulated activity.

Treasury Meetings

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the minutes of the monthly tripartite meetings between the Treasury, the FSA and the Bank of England. [R] [89332]

Ms Hewitt: The meetings include discussions of individual cases, as well as more general systemic threats. Since much of the information discussed is covered by statutory bars on disclosure, it would not be appropriate to publish the minutes.

Securities Activity (Internet)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response his Department has made to the International Organisation of Securities Commission's report on the Reduction of Systemic Risk and Securities Activity on the Internet published in September 1998. [R] [89328]

Ms Hewitt: The IOSCO report "Securities Activity on the Internet" examined the regulatory and enforcement issues posed by securities activities conducted over the Internet. The Government have found the IOSCO report helpful in considering the issues raised by new technologies in the context of the Financial Services and Markets Bill.

Financial Services Authority (Scottish Lawyers)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with Scottish lawyers' organisations regarding the transfer of the regulation of Scottish lawyers offering financial advice to the FSA. [R] [89327]

Ms Hewitt: HM Treasury has held a number of meetings with the Law Society of Scotland in the course of consulting on and drafting the Bill and associated secondary legislation.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of pensions mis-selling have been referred to the police by the FSA. [R] [89330]

Ms Hewitt: None.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in National Insurance Contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88860]

Ms Hewitt: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Chancellor's departments will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is therefore not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Chancellor's departments.

Financial Services and Markets Bill

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions his Department has had with the Better Regulation Task Force regarding the new regulatory powers proposed in the Financial Services and Markets Bill. [R] [89326]

Ms Hewitt: HM Treasury has received helpful comments from the Better Regulation Task Force in the course of consulting on and drafting the Bill.

Company Cars

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage he estimates company car mileage will reduce as a consequence of the measures introduced in his last Budget. [88717]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The measures introduced in the last Budget reduce the incentive for drivers to use a company car for business mileage and to do excess business mileage simply to qualify for discounts on their tax charge. They are therefore likely to lead to a small reduction in company car mileage. The Inland Revenue also estimates that as a result of the comprehensive reforms to be introduced in 2002, between 100 and 300 million fewer business miles will be driven in company cars, a reduction of between 0.3 per cent.–0.8 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Animal Feed

12. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department plans to take to ensure that animal feed including genetically modified ingredients is adequately labelled. [87927]

Mr. Rooker: There are extensive EC rules on the labelling of animal feed. The Government are seeking improved listing of ingredients and pressing the Commission to forward to the Council its proposed regulation covering novel animal feeds. This is necessary to ensure fair and consistent labelling of GM feeds throughout the EU. Pending the introduction of such EC measures, we are also exploring whether national labelling arrangements are feasible.

US Imports

13. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from farmers about the level of imports of US agricultural products. [87928]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am glad to say that the level of agricultural imports coming from the US has not been a significant focus of concern for UK farmers in the recent past.

Safe Farming

14. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to promote safe working practices in farming. [87930]

Mr. Rooker: I fully endorse the Health and Safety Commission's strategy which includes agriculture as a priority area and my Department supports the Health and Safety Executive in its work in farming, and has initiated a project in Cornwall and Devon.

Sheep Exports

15. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the welfare of sheep which are exported from the UK. [87931]

Mr. Morley: Whilst the sheep are on our territory we strictly apply the EU rules that relate to their fitness to travel, suitability of the means of transport and other aspects of their welfare.

We also urge the receiving member states to do the same on their territory: officials maintain contacts with their opposite numbers in support of this.

Cheese

16. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to promote the making of sheep and goats' cheese in the north-east of England. [87932]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Government are committed to supporting a speciality food industry in which specialist cheesemakers play a significant role.

Beef Exports

17. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects beef to be exported to the continent. [87933]

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the date-based export scheme for beef to be operational throughout the UK. [87917]

Mr. Nick Brown: The European Commission inspected our operational arrangements for the date-based export scheme in the week 12 to 16 April. The report of this inspection was presented to their Standing Veterinary Committee on 15 June and includes a recommendation that the Commission should set the date from which exports of beef under the scheme may begin.

Dioxins (Belgium)

18. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions he took in response to the discovery of dioxins in Belgian poultry and dairy produce. [87934]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement given by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 480–81.

Battery Hens

19. Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the welfare of battery hens. [87935]

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the agreement at the June Agriculture Council concerning phasing out battery hens by 2012. [87939]

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is introducing to phase out the farming of battery hens. [87923]

Mr. Morley: We shall implement the EU Directive which was agreed in Luxembourg on 15 June. This requires all members states to ban the conventional battery cage from 1 January 2012 and to apply improved standards to its use in the meantime.

My right hon. Friend the Minister was delighted to be part of the qualified majority which took this historic decision.

Meat Hygiene

20. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about compliance with meat hygiene regulations in other parts of the EU. [87936]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission's Food and Veterinary Office (FVO) is responsible for ensuring that individual EU member states comply with their Community public health obligations, including the enforcement of the EU meat hygiene Directives. The FVO carries out a regular programme of inspection visits to all member states and publishes the reports of all such visits.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if raw meat products produced from whole carcases in meat processing plants, in premises which come under the supervision of local authority enforcement officers fail to meet hygiene standards more frequently than meats produced from whole carcases in cutting plants which come under the supervision of the Meat Hygiene Service. [88395]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available.

Food Standards Agency

22. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the timetable for the introduction of the Food Standards Agency. [87940]

Mr. Rooker: If the Food Standards Bill can be passed successfully, we aim to have the Agency in place in the first half of next year.

Milk Marque

23. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of Milk Marque. [87941]

Mr. Morley: It would not be appropriate to comment until after my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has published the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of raw milk in Great Britain.

School Milk

24. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had regarding the provision of school milk. [87942]

Mr. Morley: My Department has regular discussions with interested groups about the operation of the EC School Milk Subsidy Scheme. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Minister raised the subject at the last Agriculture Council and received considerable support for our view about the value of the current EU scheme.

Set-aside

25. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made on allowing the use of set-aside for environmental purposes. [87943]

Mr. Morley: The environmental advantages that can be gained from set-aside will be enhanced by the commitment we obtained from the Commission at the Council on 14–15 June to allow member states to apply more flexible set-aside rules where this brings environmental benefits.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates Special Advisers from his Department have travelled abroad on official business since 2 May 1997; which countries were visited on each occasion; and what were the names of the Special Advisers who travelled on each occasion. [86293]

Mr. Nick Brown: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) on 15 April 1999, Official Report, column 319 and 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 249–50.

Farmers' Markets

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he is giving to the establishment of farmers' markets; and if he will make a statement. [88168]

Mr. Rooker: I support fully the establishment of farmers' markets. The Department organised a seminar on 9 March with key players to encourage the development and promulgation of the concept.

Kali Mountford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had on the development of farmers' markets. [87929]

Mr. Nick Brown: I opened the Islington Farmers' Market last month.

Pig Industry

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to ensure that Government Departments, local authorities and other related agencies purchase only UK-produced pigmeat products. [88855]

Mr. Rooker: This Department has no powers to dictate to authorities with public procurement responsibilities. None the less, my right hon. Friend the Minister has written to a number of Government Departments to underline the guarantees that British pigmeat can offer. He drew attention to the good story which the industry has to tell in respect of its efforts on quality assured and welfare friendly production practices. The responses received indicate that quality assured and welfare friendly production practices play a full part in the tender specifications laid down by public procurement bodies.

We believe that the most effective way to achieve change in the practices of reluctant local councils and health and education authorities is for contact to be made at the local level, both by the industry and by local MPs.

On those occasions where contact has been made, it seems to have had a positive effect. My right hon. Friend intends, therefore, to write to all MPs actively encouraging them to make contact with public authorities in their constituencies and invite those authorities to take British welfare and quality standards into account when procuring pork and pork products.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government will introduce regulations to impose the same standards of traceability and quality assurance on imported pigmeat products as apply to UK-produced pigmeat. [88856]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no powers to do so. It is also questionable whether such an imposition would be in the interests of the UK pig industry as it could forgo the possibility of obtaining a premium in the market.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if the Government will cover the cost to pig farmers of offal and waste disposal; and if he will make a statement; [88852]

(2) if the Government will restore rendering subsidies for the UK pig industry. [88853]

Mr. Rooker: There are no plans to do so.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in national insurance contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88865]

Mr. Morley: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on this department will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is therefore not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on this department.

Organophosphorous Sheep Dips

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the report by the Institute of Occupational Medicine in Edinburgh into the effects of exposure to organophosphorous sheep dips will be published. [89848]

Mr. Rooker: The Institute of Occupational Medicine (IOM) is today publishing its report on the effects of exposure to organophosphorous sheep dips.

The report identifies handling of OP sheep dip concentrates as the main source of potential exposure. It suggests that the identified exposure to concentrates was associated with an increased likelihood of ill-health in the groups studied.

The report is being submitted immediately for consideration by the OP Working Group of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) which is reviewing the evidence on the possible ill-health effects of OPs. We expect to receive advice from COT, and from the other independent expert advisory committees on the implications of the COT advice, by the end of the year.

In addition, I have asked the Veterinary Products Committee and the Advisory Committee on Pesticides to consider urgently, in advance of the COT advice, whether the report has any immediate implications for approvals of OPs or whether further measures are necessary.

I have also written today to representatives of manufacturers seeking a meeting within the week to discuss what action they will be proposing in response to the report.

I am placing copies of the report in the Library of the House.

Countryside Access Scheme

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about closure of the Countryside Access Scheme. [89849]

Mr. Morley: I am announcing today that the Countryside Access Scheme will be closed to new applications. This pilot agri-environment scheme provided public access to set aside land. Public access to farmland will continue to be available under the Countryside Stewardship and Environmentally Sensitive Areas schemes, which provide more comprehensive incentives for farmers to provide access.

All existing CAS agreements will continue until the end of their five year terms. At the expiry of their agreements, farmers will be offered the opportunity to apply for agreements under the Countryside Stewardship Scheme. Those which provide good quality opportunities for public access will be offered agreements.

Junior Doctors

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the outcome of the BMA survey which asked if junior doctors were prepared to take some form of industrial action regarding the out-of-hours rates of pay and conditions of service; [88068]

(2) what discussions he is having with the BMA's Junior Doctors' Committee about improving the hourly rates paid to junior doctors for their work at night, weekends and bank holidays. [88067]

Mr. Denham: Pay rates for junior doctors, including rates for out-of-hours work, are decided on the basis of recommendations by the independent Doctors' and Dentists' Pay Review Body (DDRB). Their 28th Report, published on 1 February 1999, concluded that > "there was no need for changes to the existing working patterns of junior doctors and against that background the existing rates of additional duty hours remain appropriate".

I held a positive and constructive meeting on 10 June with the representatives of the Junior Doctors' Committee on a number of issues relating to pay and conditions of service. We agreed that further meetings with officials would be held over the coming weeks.

I value the commitment of all junior doctors working in the National Health Service. However, the threat of industrial action following the recent survey is an appropriate response in the light of that commitment, which can serve only to jeopardise patient care if carried through and is inappropriate for professional staff whose pay is set on the basis of recommendations made by an independent Review Body. Industrial action could undermine the modern staffing initiatives we are seeking to introduce to improve the working lives of junior doctors: shorter working hours, better training opportunities, decent pay levels, higher standards of accommodation and catering facilities and new family friendly employment practices.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the health authorities in which junior hospital doctors can be on call and working for periods of (i) 24 hours, (ii) 32 hours, (iii) 36 hours, (iv) 48 hours and (v) any longer continuous period and (b) those specialties or areas of hospital medicine in which such hours on call and working most frequently occur. [86707]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his Department's response to the report of the Pensions and Retirement Age Working Group, published by the Ambulance Service Association 1997. [89087]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 30 June 1999]: The National Health Service Executive and the National Health Service Pensions Agency have discussed the findings of the report with the Ambulance Service Association. Further work is being done on costing the proposals.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Joint Working Group which he set up with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to improve the provision of therapies for children with special educational needs to complete its work. [87854]

Mr. Hutton: The working group on the provision of speech and language therapy services to children with special educational needs was established in November 1998 and its membership includes representatives of a wide range of interested parties. The working group has met on four occasions to date. Progress and future plans will be reviewed at the group's meeting in November 1999 in the light of preliminary feedback from specially commissioned research into speech and language therapy provision.

Mobile Communications Bases

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is currently being undertaken or commissioned by the National Radiological Protection Board on the health effects of mobile communications base stations on the neighbouring population. [88108]

Ms Jowell: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has a programme of research into exposures and possible effects of radiofrequency radiation from mobile phones and base stations. It has carried out field measurements in the vicinity of a number of base stations and it is proposed to extend the measurement database to be representative of a variety of base station locations in the United Kingdom.

Experimental work is in progress to investigate potential effects on learning and memory using low level signals of the type used for mobile telephony. A research programme to investigate the possible induction of chromosome damage in cultured human cells is being developed.

Other work involves computer models derived from medical images of people; these have been used to calculate how electromagnetic fields interact with the body. This work is ongoing.

The NRPB's Advisory Group on Non-Ionising Radiation continues to review research on the health effects of electromagnetic fields and NRPB have been instructed to set up an independent working group to assess the current state of research into the use of mobile phones. The group will be chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS, FRSE. The membership and terms of reference will be announced shortly.

Buprenorphine

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the FP10(HP)(ad) and FP10(MDA) forms will be amended to include buprenorphine (Subutex), to enable medical practitioners to prescribe the drug on a daily basis for a week by completing one form. [87999]

Mr. Denham: At present I have no plans to add buprenorphine to the list of drugs which may be prescribed by doctors on FP10(HP)(ad) and FP10(MDA) prescription forms.

Beta-interferon

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) by what means recipients of Health Service Circular 1999/101 were informed that it had been withdrawn; [88002]

(2) if he will list the recipients of Health Service Circular 1999/101 prior to its withdrawal on 20 April; [88001]

(3) when he proposes to publish a new National Health Service circular on the use of beta-interferon in the treatment of multiple sclerosis to replace Health Service Circular 1999/101; [88191]

(4) if the proposed health service circular on the use of beta-interferon in the treatment of multiple sclerosis will distinguish between its value in treating relapsing/remitting multiple sclerosis and secondary progressive multiple sclerosis. [88190]

Mr. Denham: Advance copies of draft Health Service Circular 1999/999, which was due to be issued on 20 April 1999 as Health Service Circular 1999/101, were sent to the Multiple Sclerosis Society, the three manufacturers of beta-interferon, and the National Health Service (Regional Directors of Public Health and Regional Prescribing Leads, who were invited to forward the draft circular to health authorities).

Owing to concerns expressed by some of the recipients of the draft circular, it was not issued on 20 April. The NHS was informed of this by way of a letter from the NHS Executive's Acting Medical Director, Dr. Sheila Adam. Copies of this letter are available in the Library. I also refer my hon. Friend to the statement made in the House by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 22 April 1999, Official Report, columns 1055–56.

The Department plans to consult interested parties shortly on a revised draft health service circular on beta-interferon. The contents of the circular that is subsequently issued will take into account comments received during the consultation period.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make beta-interferon available on the NHS for progressive MS; and what funding is to be made available to health authorities for it. [88737]

Mr. Denham: Beta-interferon may be made available on the National Health Service, but the costs of prescribing it are expected to be met within health authority allocations.

Medicines Control Agency

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters he has received to date (a) in support of and (b) opposed to the proposed MLX 249 Regulation. [88004]

Ms Jowell: We received six representations broadly supporting the proposals and 610 representations opposing some or all of the proposals during the 12 week consultation period, which ended on 31 January 1999. Since the end of the consultation period we have received several thousand more letters opposing the proposals, many of which were based on a fundamental misapprehension of the content, purpose and effect of the proposals.

Unused Medicines

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number and value of unopened blister packs of drugs returned to dispensing chemists for the latest year for which figures are available; [88146]

(2) what is the value of medicines returned by patients to dispensing chemists for the latest year for which figures are available. [88147]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received organs for transplant which originated from countries outside the EU in each of the last three years. [88145]

Mr. Hutton: For the period 1 January 1996 to 31 December 1998 there were 10 transplant operations using organs which originated from countries outside the EU. Three were carried out in 1996, two in 1997 and five in 1998.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organs for transplant were brought into the UK from EU member states; and what percentage came from living donors in the most recent year for which figures are available. [88837]

Mr. Hutton: In 1998, 26 organs for transplant were accepted from hospitals in European Union countries outside the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. Of these, 23 were suitable and subsequently transplanted.

No living donor organs were offered from abroad during 1998.

Accident and Emergency Departments (Staff Security)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to improve security for staff working in accident and emergency departments. [88340]

Mr. Denham: We have initiated the biggest programme of capital investment in accident and emergency services in the history of the National Health Service (a total of £115 million in three quarters of all Accident and Emergency departments). This money should ensure that patients are treated more quickly, more effectively and with greater privacy than ever before, and create safer working conditions for staff.

Tackling violence against staff is a priority area for action. A key objective is that each local employer will, by April 2000, have systems in place to record and monitor the incidents of workplace violence and have published strategies in place to achieve a reduction.

The NHS Executive is also working on a cross-government drive to reduce the incidences of violence against staff. The campaign, which has the support of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Office, my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General. The campaign will be backed up by national guidelines for action including prevention, prosecution, sentencing, good practice and challenging targets. The over-arching message of this campaign will be that violence against staff is unacceptable and that the Government are determined to stamp it out.

Bedford Hospital

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 March 1999, Official Report, column 844, if he will meet Dr. Niblett to discuss the number of beds in relation to demand for them at Bedford Hospital. [88184]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met Dr. Niblett on 11 February this year and visited the Intensive Care Unit at Bedford Hospital.

Smoking

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to protect children from the effects of passive smoking in public places. [88214]

Ms Jowell: The White Paper "Smoking Kills" includes a new charter on smoking in public places, agreed by the hospitality industry. We will now negotiate with the industry to work up the detail of a Charter which will ensure that all consumers, including children, are better able to choose whether to eat, drink or socialise in smoky atmospheres. The results will be monitored and we will consider the need for any further action in the light of progress.

Temporary Contracts

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets he has set health care trusts for the eradication of temporary contracts; and if he will make a statement. [88392]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service managers need the flexibility to offer temporary or short-term contracts. We want to stop the systematic use of such contracts in the National Health Service, and the National Health Service Executive has made it clear that short-term (fixed) contracts should be offered only where a post is genuinely time limited. The general presumption is that permanent contracts should be the norm.

Influenza Immunisation

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what data are required to be collected on influenza immunisations by (a) his Department, (b) local health authorities and (c) regional health authorities; [88778]

(2) what requirements exist for general practitioners to provide data on the number of their patients vaccinated against influenza in risk groups; [88773]

(3) what information is collected on the coverage of the influenza vaccine (a) in risk groups and (b) for all people over 75 years of age; [88775]

(4) what targets his Department has set for increasing the percentage of people in risk groups receiving influenza vaccinations. [88777]

Ms Jowell: No data are required to be collected but some health authorities collect the information locally. Estimates of national influenza vaccine coverage are made by analysing the General Practice Research Database by risk group and by age. Figures for 1989 to 1997 were published in Health Trends (1998; 30: 51–5), copies of which are available in the Library. Overall uptake in the risk groups was estimated to be about 23 per cent. and varied with age—about 44 per cent. of those over 65 years in a high risk group received vaccine in 1996–97 compared with 13 per cent. of those aged 35–49 years. Figures for the 1998–99 influenza season are not yet available. Targets are not set because of the difficulty of accurately assessing denominators for the risk groups.

Guidance for health authorities on planning for dealing with winter pressures includes the need to increase influenza immunisation uptake in the risk groups. Flu Awareness Week, launched each year at a press briefing held by the Chief Medical Officer, also aims to increase vaccine uptake.

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by his Department to local health authorities and general practitioners about running effective influenza immunisation campaigns to target risk groups. [88772]

Ms Jowell: Information for general practitioners and health authorities is given in the United Kingdom Health Departments' memorandum 'Immunisation against Infectious Disease' and in letters and circulars issued by the Department (most recently Professional Letter/Chief Medical Officer/98/4/PL/Chief Nursing Officer/98/6 and Health Service Circular 1998–140), copies of which are available in the Library.

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what scientific evidence his Department has evaluated on the success rate of the influenza vaccine in preventing this disease. [88779]

Ms Jowell: Influenza viruses change and different strains predominate from year to year. Each season a new vaccine is produced from strains of virus closely related to those expected to be in circulation. The effectiveness of the vaccine will depend on how well the vaccine strains match the strains of influenza that actually circulate. Effective global surveillance co-ordinated by the World Health Organisation means that in most years there is a good match.

All information on the effectiveness of influenza vaccine in preventing influenza and its complications is reviewed on a regular basis by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation, the expert advisory committee that advises the Government on immunisation matters.

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the unit cost of an influenza vaccination. [88770]

Ms Jowell: The list prices for vaccines are given in the British National Formulary, copies of which are available in the Library. Last season's list prices for influenza vaccine ranged from £5.08 to £5.70 a dose. Prices for the coming season have not yet been announced.

Teenage Pregnancy

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how and when the proposed Sure Start Plus announced in the Social Exclusion Unit report on teenage pregnancy will be piloted; which areas have been chosen; what criteria will be used; and what resources will be available for such pilots. [88670]

Ms Jowell: Roll out of the Sure Start Plus pilots will begin from April 2000. They will be funded from within the Sure Start programme. The areas chosen will be covered by Health Action Zones and have high rates of teenage pregnancy.

Cancer Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 416, if he will make a statement on the joint funding by the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital Trust and the North Staffordshire Trust of a cancer specialist. [88724]

Mr. Hutton: The North Staffordshire Hospital National Health Service Trust has recently appointed a clinical oncologist who will also work a number of sessions in the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital NHS Trust joint cancer centre. Manpower issues in respect of the business case for a new linear accelerator at the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital joint cancer centre will be explored more thoroughly within the NHS Executive—West Midlands Regional Office's overall consideration of the business case.

Loughborough General Hospital

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 133, when he expects the National Health Service Executive to make a final response to the full business case made by Leicestershire and Rutland Healthcare NHS Trust for the replacement of Loughborough's General Hospital. [88595]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive provided a detailed response to Leicestershire and Rutland Healthcare NHS Trust about their Full Business Case (FBC) to replace Loughborough General Hospital on 3 June 1999.

The NHS Executive has not been able to make a formal decision on the recommendation of the FBC as further work is required on some key elements of the FBC, including issues relating to the scheme's value for money.

The trust is currently working on responses to the issues raised by the NHS Executive and is to set a timescale for the FBC to be resubmitted. In view of the length of time that it has taken to progress this scheme, the NHS Executive will be having meetings with the trust as a matter of urgency to resolve the above issues and progress the scheme to resolution.

Allergy Clinics

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of allergy clinics. [88657]

Mr. Hutton: Officials from the Department recently met representatives of the relevant professional and patient representative bodies to discuss the future of allergy services; possible action will be discussed at a follow-up meeting to be arranged. It is, however, the responsibility of individual health authorities to assess the health care needs of their residents and to secure access to a range of services which aim to meet those needs. Each health authority therefore decides how great the need for a local allergy clinic is, based on local priorities and resources.

Dental Services

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase the availability of dental treatment on the NHS. [88604]

Mr. Denham: The Government have already taken action to improve the availability of National Health Service (NHS) dentistry through the Investing in Dentistry (IID) and Personal Dental Services (PDS) initiatives. The IID initiative, which ended in April, should give over 650,000 extra patients the opportunity of registering with an NHS dentist. The 15 PDS pilots which began in October 1998, and the 24 new proposals to be developed into pilots for this October, are designed to offer NHS patients a better, more accessible, reliable and higher quality dental service. The Government are now examining options on how best to use the resources available for further improving the availability of dentistry. A dental strategy will be published later this year.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the NHS strategy for dentistry. [89080]

Mr. Denham: The Government's strategy on National Health Service dentistry will be published later this year.

GP Facilities

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to discuss with commercial organisations the availability of sites for the development of GP facilities; and if he will make a statement. [88823]

Mr. Denham: Officials regularly have discussions with interested parties, including commercial organisations, about primary care facilities and I am kept informed of developments.

National Donor Register

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanism is in place to target those people aged 18 years to go on the National Donor Register. [88713]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Our continuing national and local publicity campaigns encourage people to join the NHS Organ Donor Register, to carry the Donor Card at all times and, most importantly, make their wishes known to their family and friends. The campaigns have been designed to reach people of all ages.

While there is no specific mechanism for targeting 18-year-olds, people can register when applying for driving licences and this is one of the major routes onto the register. A high proportion of such driving licence applications are from first time applicants in the 17–21-year-old age group.

Hospital Food

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of hospital trusts which have in place a system of quality control for hospital food; and what advice his Department has given to trusts on the introduction of such quality control systems. [88866]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Guidance on delivering a quality catering service and improving nutrition standards has been issued to the National Health Service in recent years to ensure that food and eating are seen as an important part of patient care. All NHS trusts have been asked to adopt a recommended framework for auditing and monitoring performance to ensure consistent standards.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in national insurance contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88858]

Mr. Denham: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Department will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until the Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of a number of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is therefore not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Department.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into xenotransplantation; and if he will make a statement. [88941]

Mr. Hutton: The Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant in aid from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, is currently funding two projects related to xenotransplantation:

"Germ-line modification of pig organs for human transplantation" being conducted by the BBSRC Babraham Institute.

"Endogenous retroviruses of pigs and xenotransplantation" being conducted by the Institute of Cancer Research and the MRC National Institute for Medical Research.

The Department is directly funding a further project:

"An investigation into the ability of porcine endogenous retroviruses to infect animals other than pigs" being conducted by the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

The Department is in the process of commissioning two systematic reviews of the published literature covering xenotransplantation. The first review will be looking at physiology, immunology and infection issues; the second covering legal and ethical issues. The reviews, which are expected to take around twelve months to complete, will help to highlight those areas where further research would be beneficial. Recommendations for further research are also included in the recently published United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority report of the workshop on porcine endogenous retroviruses.

Biomedical Scientists

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the salary scales for trainee and newly qualified biomedical scientists. [88832]

Mr. Denham: Biomedical scientists are classed as medical laboratory scientific officers (MLSOs) for pay and grading purposes. Their pay scales are attached to a common pay spine for National Health Service Professional and Technical Staff. The current pay scale for trainee MLSOs, effective since 1 December 1998 is:

Spine point	£
01	7,726
02	7,988
03	8,260
04	8,544
05	8,839
06	9,146
08	9,796

The MLSO Grade 1 pay scale is used for newly qualified biomedical scientists. The current pay scale effective from 1 December 1998 is:

Spine point	£
00	11,812
01	12,286

08	16,169
10	17,486

Pay is negotiated in the Professional and Technical Staffs Whitley Council. Staff Side are consulting their members on the NHS Management Side's offer of:

an increase in national pay scales for PTB staff of 3 per cent.

an increase of 13.5 per cent. in London Weighting Allowances which will restore them to 1995 values additional increases for staff working in cytology screening, with trainee cytology screeners getting 6.6 per cent. and qualified cytology screeners getting up to 11.4 per cent.

additional increases for staff in the MLSO grades, with trainee MLSOs getting up to 26 per cent., and MLSO1s and some MLSO2s getting 7.1 per cent.

If accepted this offer would produce a new pay scale for trainee MLSOs of:

Spine point	£
00	9,420
01	9,747
03	10,443

And a new pay scale for MLSO1s of:

Spine point	£
15	12,655
16	13,160
17	13,689
18	14,237
19	14,806
20	15,397
21	16,012
22	16,654
23	[1]17,322
25	[1]18,734

[1] Employing authorities may advance the position of a grade scale (other than that of a trainee) on the pay spine by up to three points for posts which carry additional responsibilities or require specialist skills but which do not warrant a higher grade.

DTP Vaccine

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs per batch of the (a) whole cell and (b) acellular DTP vaccine. [89008]

Ms Jowell: Vaccines are purchased by dose, not by batch. The Department does not publicise the cost per dose of any childhood vaccines, including whole cell DTP, as this information is a commercially confidential part of the procurement process. The only acellular DTP vaccine which is licensed for use in the United Kingdom is made by SmithKline Beecham and has a list price of £11.00 per dose.

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 185, for what reasons the whole cell DTP vaccine is used in the UK, in preference to the acellular vaccine; and if he will make a statement. [89050]

Ms Jowell: Whole cell pertussis vaccine, used in combined DTP vaccine, is used in the United Kingdom because it is the safest and most effective pertussis vaccine available for the UK childhood immunisation programme.

Large vaccine trials in Sweden and Germany have shown that the pertussis whole cell vaccine that we use in the United Kingdom is amongst the most effective available. There is little difference in the level of local reactions and fever seen after use of the UK whole cell vaccine when compared to acellular pertussis vaccines given under the UK immunisation schedule. The protection given by the UK vaccine is as good as the best acellular vaccine tested and better than the rest. There is also some evidence that combining the acellular pertussis vaccine with Hib vaccine, which is given at the same time, may decrease the immune response to Hib which affects its suitability for routine use.

Genetically Modified Pollen

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) received into the effect on hay-fever sufferers of the breathing in of genetically-modified pollen. [88874]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 June 1999]: This Department has not commissioned research into the effect that pollen from genetically modified crops may have on hayfever sufferers, nor has it received any. I have asked the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants to take a preliminary look at this issue at the earliest opportunity.

Medicines (Bovine Material)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 June 1999, Official Report, column 382, what estimate he has made of the quantity of vaccines held by manufacturers in whose early stages of manufacture bovine material had been used (a) when precautionary measures were introduced in 1989 and (b) when European Commission guidelines were issued in 1992. [88957]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 29 June 1999]: None.

Drug-resistant Tuberculosis

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter of 12 January (POH(3) 5437/68), what recent action he has taken to combat drug-resistant TB. [87389]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Work to combat drug-resistant and multi-drug resistant tuberculosis is continuing. The United Kingdom has heightened its surveillance of drug and multidrug-resistant tuberculosis through a scheme co-ordinated by the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) through the UK Mycobacterial Resistance Network. Work has also commenced on enhanced surveillance of tuberculosis cases which should improve monitoring. The appointment of Regional Epidemiologists should help towards a more co-ordinated approach. The activities of the PHLS are now co-ordinated through the new Tuberculosis Programme. The PHLS has developed and made available more rapid diagnostic and drug susceptibility tests for tuberculosis, which can be used where there is a presence of risk factors which might predispose towards multidrug-resistant tuberculosis. A report by the Interdepartmental Working Group on Tuberculosis, "UK guidance for prevention and control of the transmission of HIV-related and drug resistant, including multiple drug-resistant, tuberculosis", was published in September 1998.

Prodigy Prescribing System

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if lists of products appearing on the Prodigy prescribing system have been circulated to relevant patients and specialist groups for their views; and what formal consultation process exists in respect of such products; [89104]

(2) what plans he has for the further use of the Prodigy prescribing system by GPs; [89100]

(3) what account the Prodigy prescribing system takes of existing clinical guidelines; [89099]

(4) what consultations his Department has undertaken in respect of the Prodigy prescribing support system in the last two years; [89098]

(5) what method was used to select the products which appear on the Prodigy prescribing system; [89105]

(6) if he will list the members of the selection panel for products on the Prodigy prescribing system; [89102]

(7) what assessment he has made of GPs' views on the Prodigy prescribing system. [89101]

Mr. Denham: The Prodigy decision support system has undergone two research phases, during which it was tested in 183 general practices with around 750 doctors. The results of the research indicated that a large proportion of general practitioners were very interested in having such a tool available for their use. In light of this positive response, a first release version of Prodigy will be made available to any GP who wants it. There will be a third phase of the research project, which will look at the management of chronic disease.

Prodigy is designed to offer good quality, clinically effective advice to GPs. When applying the Prodigy recommendations, doctors should use their discretion and clinical judgment, taking into account individual patient variations and needs. General practitioners remain free to prescribe whichever product they feel is the most appropriate for their patients.

The recommended treatments in Prodigy have been chosen on the basis of clinical effectiveness, safety and appropriateness. Where more than one drug exists with similar clinical effect, or where the benefits of one drug over another are marginal, then cost is brought into consideration. The clinical advice contained in the current release of Prodigy is refined and validated with the assistance of a committee of representatives from the General Practitioners Committee, the Royal College of General Practitioners, the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. All were chosen for the personal expertise and qualities they were able to bring to the process. For the longer term, an equally robust process will be set up under the oversight of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE). Full details of how NICE will take this forward will be published in due course. Prodigy guidance takes full account of existing national or well-recognised guidelines, where these are appropriate to general medical practice. In time, Prodigy will allow easy access to NICE guidance and a swift means of communicating emergency medical messages to GPs, plus information about new drugs, contra-indications and safety alerts.

Patient groups, the pharmaceutical industry and other representative organisations have been consulted throughout the Prodigy project, both on the content of the clinical guidance and on patient information leaflets available as part of the Prodigy system. Each organisation is given the opportunity to comment on new Prodigy recommendations as they are developed and their views are taken into account at the time the recommendations are finalised. These groups will continue to be consulted as Prodigy is made more widely available to GPs over the coming months.

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what skin products appear on the Prodigy prescribing system; and how they were selected. [89103]

Mr. Denham: A list of the skin products which appear in, or are being considered for inclusion in, the Prodigy guidance on skin conditions, will be placed in the Library. The majority of these dermatology topics have not yet been released to general practitioners as they are undergoing final amendments (the status of each Prodigy guidance topic is indicated in the schedule).

All products are selected on the basis of clinical effectiveness, safety and appropriateness.

Counselling Training

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on training medical professionals in counselling and interpersonal and management skills in the last year for which figures are available. [89092]

Mr. Denham: Although training in counselling, interpersonal and management skills is an important component of all stages of medical education, no data are held centrally on the resources devoted to these activities. Decisions on the allocation of resources between different components of training are professional considerations and are not prescribed centrally.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidelines have been issued to magistrates in respect of the sentencing of young offenders under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [88928]

Mr. Vaz: The Government do not issue sentencing guidelines to magistrates. Factual information about the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act has been provided in accordance with normal practice.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what training has been given to magistrates regarding the sentencing of young offenders under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [88929]

Mr. Vaz: It is the responsibility of individual Magistrates Courts' Committees (MCCs) to provide training to the magistrates in their area. The Judicial Studies Board has provided training materials for those provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 which are currently being piloted. These materials are being evaluated and will be issued to all MCCs in time for the piloted provisions being introduced nationally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arms Decommissioning

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost to date of implementing the provisions of the Northern Ireland Arms Decommissioning Act 1997. [88811]

Mr. Ingram: It is not possible to give the exact total cost to date as the expenditure incurred by the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning is shared with the Irish Government. To date, the British Government have contributed £1,099,439, which represents approximately 50 per cent. of the total cost.

Visitor Statistics

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) Holiday Visitors and (b) Business Visitors to Northern Ireland from (i) Great Britain, (ii) the Republic of Ireland and (iii) the rest of the world there were in the last year for which figures are available. [89130]

Mr. Ingram: During 1998, 277,000 Holiday Visitors came to Northern Ireland, 81,000 from Great Britain, 90,000 from the Republic of Ireland and 106,000 from the rest of the world.

434,000 Business Visitors came in 1998—an estimated 302,000 from Great Britain, 80,000 from the Republic of Ireland and 52,000 from the rest of the world.

Special Advisers

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what are the increases to the Special Adviser pay bands for 1999–2000; and how many Advisers are in each pay band, by Department. [88645]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The minima and maxima of the Special Adviser pay bands have each been increased by 2.8 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1999, the same increase as for the Senior Civil Service pay bands. The three pay bands are now:

Pay band	Scale

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Documents of Record

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make a statement on the extent of use of paper containing acid for (i) the Official Report, (ii) House of Commons printed papers and (iii) other House of Commons documents of record; and what assessment he has made of the estimated durability and life expectancy of paper copies of (i), (ii) and (iii). [89112]

Mrs. Roe: The contract for the printing of the House's core documents (including the Official Report, Vote Bundle, Bills and Select Committee Reports) specifies the use of acid free paper of archival quality. The paper used has an alkali reserve of a minimum of 2 per cent., and an archival life in excess of 100 years.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what estimate he has made of the durability and life expectancy of paper copies of the (a) Official Report and (b) other documents of record held by the Library. [89111]

Mr. Allan: For information on the current standards for paper used for the Official Report and other House documents of record held by the Library, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by the Chairman of the Administration Committee, column 284.

The durability of older documents varies according to age, the type of paper used, the frequency of use and the storage conditions. The Library regularly monitors the condition of these documents and has a programme of conservation. It is aware of a particular problem with acidic paper used from about 1850 to 1950. Older Parliamentary Papers were moved in 1992 to controlled storage conditions in Broad Sanctuary, where there are also reserve volumes of the Official Report. The Library is investigating the feasibility of producing a digitised text of older Official Reports. As well as giving easy access to the text, this would also reduce use of the paper volumes and so aid their preservation.

UNHCR

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total cash payment in 1999 to date to UNHCR from her Department. [89620]

Mr. Foulkes: The total cash payments made by the Department for International Development (DFID) to United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) between 1 January and 30 June 1999 amount to £14.66 million. Of this total, we have contributed £7 million to UNHCR's General and Special Programmes, £3 million to a DFID/UNHCR scheme to support NGO Refugee projects, and £4.66 million to specific country programmes and regional appeals.

Departmental Grants

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what grant support her Department has given to (a) the Foundation for International Community Assistance and (b) the Small Enterprise Foundation in South Africa. [89416]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development (DFID) is providing assistance to the Foundation for International Community Assistance (FINCA) in three African countries. The details are as follows:

1. FINCA International in Tanzania: £850,000 between 1999 and 2002
2. FINCA Uganda: £98,000 between 1998 and 1999 (this project is likely to be scaled up if phase 1 is successful)
3. FINCA Malawi: £721,000 between 1998 and 2001

DFID has not received any proposals for support to FINCA in South Africa. My Department has had discussions with the South African Small Enterprise Foundation (SEF) about potential proposals.

DFID has also offered to finance a study to help the Mineworkers Development Agency (MDA; the development arm of South Africa's National Union of Mineworkers) establish a rural banking facility, for micro credit as well as savings. The MDA has held discussions with a number of potential partners in this venture, including FINCA and SEF.

Child Care

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to support child care provision in Romania. [89044]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 1 July 1999]: We are presently exploring with the Department for Child Protection of the Government of Romania how best we can assist them, taking account of other donor support in this area.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what humanitarian assistance her Department has provided to improve child care provision in central and eastern Europe. [89045]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 1 July 1999]: We financed a Child Care project in Romania between 1995 and 1998. This provided advice on the framing of child care legislation, support for the development of model Centres for Family Support and Child Protection, and assistance at county council (judet) level with the development of sustainable and accountable services to vulnerable children and families. The total cost was about £339,000. The project was managed by the European Children's Trust.

In Bulgaria, we co-financed with the EU (Phare) a project to advise on child care legislation and good practices. We provided £90,000 in 1998 for a three month study visit to the UK by child care practitioners. We have just started a £300,000 project to advise the Ministries of Education, Health and Labour and Social Policy on alternatives to institutional child care. This is being managed by Save The Children Fund.

We are also financing projects in south-eastern Europe to address the problems of refugee children in the region as a result of the Kosovo crisis. For example we have contributed £300,000 to Save The Children Fund for regional programmes, which include non-formal education through local groups and volunteer teachers; £160,000 to Children's Aid Direct for the distribution of school materials and equipment for Kosovo refugees and host communities in Macedonia; and an unearmarked sum of £2.25 million to UNICEF for their activities in the region. UNICF are aiming to improve access to health care and primary education. They have been effective in developing and advocating child friendly spaces in camps and other locations. These spaces provide basic services for children and mothers such as baby care, pre-school, primary school, recreational activities, counselling and basic health and nutrition education.

Through the newly established Humanitarian Assistance Field Office in Pristina, we will continue to identify further areas of support in accordance with the needs of the returning refugees and the displaced people of Kosovo.

VAT

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 289, regarding discussions with European institutions about VAT on financial services, what his policy is on the application of VAT to financial services; and what position HM Customs and Excise has taken in the consultations with the European Commission on the feasibility of applying VAT to financial services; [86962]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 289, regarding discussions with European institutions about VAT on financial services, if he will place a copy of the consultants' report in the Library; [86963]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 289, regarding discussions with European institutions about VAT on financial services, if he will list the positions held by the Customs officials who have attended the seminars and the conference organised by the European Commission; where and when the seminars and conference took place; what costs were incurred by the Treasury in attending the seminars and conference; and if he will make a statement. [86964]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 17 June 1999]: The European Commission has been studying the feasibility of applying VAT to financial services, including insurance, since 1993. No proposal has been made. The Government's position is clear: they will not accept any measures which damage British business, jobs and competitiveness. Customs' position in discussions with Commission officials have been consistent with this policy.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the total annual revenue that would be collected if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) 5 per cent. on the making of arrangements for, or the underwriting of, any security or secondary security; [89595]

(2) if he will estimate the total annual revenue that would be collected if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) 5 per cent. on the operation of any current, deposit or savings account as defined in subsection 8, Group 5, Schedule 9 (Exemptions) of VAT Notice 701/39 part 2. [89594]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to provide the requested estimates due to insufficient data being available on these specific financial activities.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total annual revenue that would be collected if VAT were charged at (a) 17.5 per cent. and (b) 5 per cent. on the making of any arrangements for (i) the issue, transfer or receipt of, or any dealing with, money, any security for money or any note or order for the payment of money, (ii) the making of any advance or the granting of any credit, (iii) the provision of the facility of instalment credit finance in a hire-purchase, conditional sale or credit sale agreement for which facility a separate charge is made and disclosed to the recipient of the supply of goods and (iv) the provision of administrative arrangements and documentation and the transfer of the title to the goods in connection with the provision of the facility of instalment credit finance in a hire-purchase, conditional sale or credit sale agreement for which facility a separate charge is made and disclosed to the recipient of the supply of goods if the total consideration therefore is specified in the agreement and does not exceed £10. [89596]

Dawn Primarolo: Insufficient data are available to provide the estimates sought, as I explained to the right hon. Gentleman in my written answer of 30 June 1999, Official Report, columns 226–27.

Withholding Tax

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the commitments he has made with respect to the withholding tax will apply to all forms of savings in addition to eurobonds. [89567]

Dawn Primarolo: We have made it very clear that the draft Directive on savings in its current form is unacceptable because of its likely impact on our financial markets. The Conclusions of the ECOFIN Council meeting on 1 December 1997 record that the United Kingdom considers the Directive should not apply to eurobonds and other similar instruments.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Departmental Car Pool

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cars are available for the use of (a) his Department's Ministers, (b) his Department's officials and (c) executives and officials of his Department's non-Governmental bodies and agencies. [88087]

Mr. Prescott: As at July 1998, my Department owned or leased the following number of motor vehicles:

	No. of vehicles
(a) Ministers	[1]8
(b) DETR (Central)	27
(c) Agencies	564
(d) Government Offices for the Regions	80
Total	679

[1] Leased from GCDA

Information is not available centrally in respect of vehicles owned or leased by the Departments non-departmental public bodies and other associate bodies.

Environment Agency Car Pool

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cars are owned or leased for use by members and employees of the Environment Agency. [88090]

Mr. Meacher: 237 cars are owned by the Environment Agency and 2,500 cars are leased.

Euro Preparations

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what budget (a) his Department, (b) the regional offices and (c) the Regional Development Agencies have for preparations for the euro; [88095]

(2) what action is being taken by (a) the Regional Development Agencies and (b) his Department to prepare businesses for the introduction of the euro. [88096]

Mr. Prescott: Following the publication of the Government's Outline Changeover Plan, my Department is considering what preparations may be necessary for the introduction of the euro as far as its own areas of responsibility are concerned. Beyond this, my Department and the Government Offices for the Regions have no specific budget for euro preparations, neither do the Regional Development Agencies.

Government advice for business on the implications of the introduction of the euro in the eurozone countries is co-ordinated by HM Treasury. Government support includes the setting up of 12 regional euro fora, in which the Government Offices for the Regions were involved and in which the Regional Development Agencies have been invited to participate.

EU Environment Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the latest agenda of the Environment Council of 24–25 June prior to the meeting. [88169]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 23 June 1999, to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, columns 405–06, which lists the proposals due for discussion at the Environment Council in Luxembourg on 24–25 June. Apart from the proposals listed in my earlier answer, the following items were also on the agenda:

Report on the Protocol on biosafety:

Procedure

Commission Communication to the Council and the European Parliament on the internal market and the environment:

Presentation

Commission communication to the Council and the European Parliament: "Preparing for implementation of the Kyoto Protocol":

Presentation

Other business:

(a) Conference on organic farming (Vienna 27 and 28 May 1999) Commission Statement

(b) Best environmental protection practices in other policies (Seminar in Bonn 25 May 1999): Briefing by the German Delegation

London Underground

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he was first informed that the engineering works on the Circle line might necessitate the suspension of the Circle line service. [88429]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Circle line service is not suspended. London Underground (LU) continues to operate services at all Circle line stations. Where possible, they are running extra trains on other lines to minimise passenger disruption.

LU first informed officials in my Department in November 1997 that engineering works might necessitate the closure of the Circle line between High Street Kensington and Gloucester Road stations.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the closure dates for (a) the Circle line and (b) the Northern line. [88603]

Mrs. Liddell: Engineering works between High Street Kensington and Gloucester Road, which are preventing a normal Circle line service from operating, began on 12 June 1999 and will continue to 16 August 1999. The Northern line City branch will be closed between Moorgate and Kennington from 3 July 1999 to 5 September 1999.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans have been made to provide alternative public transport for people who normally use the Northern and Circle lines. [88493]

Mrs. Liddell: Although engineering works are disrupting services, all Circle line stations remain open. London Underground are operating additional services on the Hammersmith & City and Metropolitan lines, along part of the route where Circle line services usually run, and a normal District line service along most of the rest of the Circle line. Additional buses are also running on routes 16, 23 and 52. Underground tickets and passes are valid on these buses.

While the Northern line City branch is closed between Moorgate and Kennington, a rail replacement bus service will operate and there will be also be an enhanced service on the 133 bus which runs along the route. In addition, there will be a 15 per cent. increase in services on the Northern line Charing Cross branch. Alternative routes will be advertised and extra station staff will help to keep passengers informed.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of London Underground's planned investment in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [88492]

Mrs. Liddell: London Underground's planned investment for these years is currently under review.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many trains were (a) cancelled and (b) more than 10 minutes late on the Underground in the last available month. [88489]

Mrs. Liddell: Between 2 May and 29 May, 1,258 trains were cancelled or withdrawn from service and 239 trains were delayed for more than 10 minutes.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of and how many tube travellers used (a) the Circle line and (b) the Northern line in each of the last six months for which figures are available. [88488]

Mrs. Liddell: As all stations served by Circle line trains and many served by Northern line trains are also served by other lines, London Underground (LU) are not able to provide detailed line specific information in the format requested.

However, LU estimate that 220,000 passengers use the Circle line and 540,000 use the Northern line on a typical weekday—6.2 per cent. and 15.5 per cent. of total network traffic respectively.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which tube lines other than the Circle and Northern lines London Underground proposes to close during the next 12 months. [88487]

Mrs. Liddell: London Underground (LU) proposes to close the Victoria line between Brixton and Victoria stations from 23 October until 7 November 1999. The Bakerloo line will be closed between Queens Park and Harrow and Wealdstone stations between 23 and 31 October 1999 while Railtrack, who own this section of the track, carry out engineering work. And LU are planning to close the District line between High Street Kensington and Earl's Court stations in June 2000 for approximately 10 weeks.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he was first informed that London Underground might have to close (a) the Circle and (b) the Northern line; and what meetings he held about these potential closures. [88486]

Mrs. Liddell: London Underground (LU) first informed my Department in November 1997 and September 1998 respectively that engineering works might necessitate the closure of the Circle line between High street Kensington and Gloucester Road stations and the Northern Line City Branch between Moorgate and Kennington stations.

I met the managing director of London Underground to discuss these closures on 23 June 1999. Issues such as these closures are also discussed by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London when she meets each month with the managing directors of London Underground and London Buses.

Car Parks (Tube Stations)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage increased provision of commuter car parking at tube stations. [88490]

Mrs. Liddell: London Underground is working to provide more commuter car parking at Underground stations and expect to increase the number of parking spaces by more than 10 per cent. before the end of 2000.

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88479]

Mr. Meale: I refer the hon. Member to the answer of 18 June 1999, Official Report, column 255, given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin).

Rail Industry (Subsidies)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the subsidy (a) per kilometre and (b) per passenger given to the rail industry within each European Union country in the last year for which figures are available. [88634]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The Department does not have the requested information.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many man hours have been lost on work on the Jubilee Line Extension on average per month since 1 January owing to interruptions from unnecessary use of the fire alarm system. [89398]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Approximately 700 hours on average.

Coastguard (Donaldson Report)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 28 June 1999, Official Report, column 22, on Lord Donaldson's report on the Maritime and Coastguard Agency, if the report will be made available to the public. [89395]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In accordance with his terms of reference, Lord Donaldson will be giving his advice to the Deputy Prime Minister and will do so shortly. The decision on whether to publish his advice will be taken after it has been received.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce legislation establishing a strategic rail authority. [90055]

Mr. Prescott: We are making good progress in relation to the proposals for a Strategic Rail Authority and in making railway regulation more effective and accountable. The shadow Strategic Rail Authority has been operational from 1 April, and the new Rail Regulator takes up his appointment next week. We hope to introduce a Railways Bill shortly.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on the Learning Forces initiative; and what is the forecast expenditure for each of the next five years. [88701]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As part of the Strategic Defence Review, the Learning Forces initiative substantially increased provision to assist service personnel with their personal development. This reflects our determination that the armed forces benefit fully from the Government's commitment to lifelong learning. Additional provision in the current financial year is some £10 million.

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 25 June 1999]: Of the six Service orthopaedic surgeons currently serving at the Royal Hospital, Haslar, five have applied to leave the Armed Forces.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent in each year since 1989 on recruitment for (a) the Army, (b) the RAF, (c) the Royal Navy and (d) Ministry of Defence civilian posts; and what is the planned expenditure for the next five years. [88705]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Figures for the Armed Forces are available only from 1990–91. The cost of recruitment, including the recruiting organisations, in each of the Services, since 1990–91 is as shown. Total Army recruitment costs for the year 1990–91 are not available as they cannot be identified separately.

The table shows the Departmental civilian recruitment expenditure for advertising only, plus all elements of fast stream recruitment, together with forecast expenditure for the next five years. Actual costs prior to 1997–98 are not fully available.

Death and Serious Injuries

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) deaths and (b) serious injuries occurred during (i) territorial, (ii) regular units and (iii) special forces training in the Brecon Beacons and Epynt Range between 1974 and 1999. [88937]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I can confirm, however, that there were 141 deaths and 14,441 injuries in the UK resulting from training and exercises during the last 20 years.

Service Families

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings have been held by the Service Families Task Force Ministerial Working Group. [89026]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 29 June 1999]: There has been one meeting of the Ministerial Group thus far. I wrote to my colleagues on the Ministerial Group on 1 June 1999 reviewing progress to date and giving notice of the next meeting, which I will be chairing shortly.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings of the Families Forum have taken place; and on how many occasions the Forum is scheduled to meet in the next year. [89025]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 29 June 1999]: I chair the Families Forum which is attended by the Chairs of the three Service Families Associations. The first meeting of the Families Forum took place on the 22 April 1999. This was the day after the Charter of Royal Navy and Royal Marines Families Association was signed. It is anticipated that the Forum will meet about twice a year and the next meeting is planned for the autumn.

In between meetings of the Families Forum, the Chairs of the Service Families Associations have regular contact with my officials. They were last briefed on the progress of the Task Force on 16 June 1999.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on the Service Families Task Force; and what is the planned expenditure for each of the next five years. [88702]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Service Families Task Force was created to address those problems, caused by the mobility of Service families, outside the direct control of the MOD. These are largely concerned with access to education, health and employment services which can be resolved only through joint action with other Government Departments.

There have been no new or additional costs to the Departmental budget caused by the creation of the Service Families Task Force. No additional expenditure is planned. The provision of support to the Task Force has fallen within the normal work of the Department.

Young Soldiers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of the Government in respect of (a) the recruitment of soldiers aged under 18 years and (b) their use in situations of conflict. [89127]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The minimum age of entry to the regular UK Armed Forces is 16 years. All young people under the age of 18 who volunteer to enlist must first obtain the written consent of their parents or guardians and great care is taken to ensure that young people understand precisely the nature of the commitment they are making. In respect of deployment, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 October 1998, Official Report, column 1161, in which I stated that in future only service personnel over the age of 17 years would be deployed.

Armed Forces (Under-18s)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the RAF and (c) the Army were under 18 years of age on 23 June; and what percentage of force numbers this represents. [89039]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 30 June 1999]: At 1 June, the latest date for which information is available centrally on all three services:

992 Naval Service personnel (Royal Navy and Royal Marines) were under 18 years of age, 2.3 per cent of the total strength.

4,991 Army personnel were under 18 years of age, 4.5 per cent. of the total strength.

438 RAF personnel were under 18 years of age, 0.8 per cent. of the total strength.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will answer the question of 15 June tabled by the hon. Member for West Worcestershire on the public/private partnership proposals for DERA (ref. 87372). [89599]

Mr. Spellar: I answered the hon. Member's question on 30 June 1999, Official Report, columns 158–59.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

RDX Explosives

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, columns 200–01, what export licences his Department has issued since September 1998 for explosives which have RDX as a component part; and how many applications are pending. [87954]

Dr. Howells: By the term in my earlier answer "RDX in its its raw form", the intended meaning was "RDX or explosives containing RDX, not incorporated into other products such as ammunition or missiles." All of the licences and pending applications listed in my answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, columns 200–01, covered explosive mixtures containing RDX as a component at a range of concentrations.

However, I regret that there were two errors in my answer of 26 May. Three (rather than two) of the Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) issued between 1 September 1998 and 6 May 1999, and covering goods with a rating of ML8 covered RDX in its raw form; the additional licence covered exports to the United States. Six (rather than seven) of the applications for such licences pending a decision as at 6 May covered RDX in its raw form; that one mentioned as covering an export to Japan did not in fact cover RDX.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, columns 200–01, if the destinations of the four pending licences for export of goods rated ML8 to the USA are private companies. [87953]

Dr. Howells: The US Government is the stated end user on three of the applications concerned. Licences have now been issued in respect of two of these applications; the third is still pending.

The US Government is the stated end user of the goods covered by the fourth application, although in this case the goods are first to be exported to a private company in the United States for explosives production. This application too is still pending.

Anti-personnel Landmines

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances his Department seeks to ensure that explosives exported from the United Kingdom are not used in the production of anti-personnel landmines. [87956]

Dr. Howells: Licences to export arms or other goods controlled for strategic reasons are issued by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, acting through the Export Control Organisation of the Department of Trade and Industry. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by the DTI to other Government departments with an interest, as determined by these departments in line with their policy responsibilities. These include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development.

If, when an application is being considered, the Export Control Organisation of my department is advised that additional information is required, for example specific supplementary end-use assurances, the applicant is informed and the decision on their application is taken in light of the information subsequently received.

All applications for licences to export goods entered in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 are assessed against the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary for State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 28 July 1998, Official Report, columns 26–29, and the European Union Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will calculate the comparative costs of (a) electricity and (b) gas in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the United States of America and (iii) the EU (1) before and (2) after the Climate Change Levy is introduced; and if he will make a statement. [88105]

Mr. Battle: The latest year for which international prices are available is 1997. Average industrial electricity and gas prices are as shown in the table. The final Climate Change Levy will not be set until the Finance Bill 2000, and the Chancellor has made it clear that significant discounts will be made available to energy intensive users who agree measures for improving energy efficiency.

Pence per kWh

	Electricity 1997	Gas 1997

United States	2.67	0.71
European Union[1,2]	3.97	0.88

European Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much funding has been received from European structural funds over the past five years by (a) each of the regions of England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland. [89188]

Mr. Wills: European structural funds allocations for the years 1994–98 are given in the table. They are for objectives 1, 2, and 5b in the United Kingdom. Allocations for the Community Initiatives and for the objectives 3, 4 and 5a are given separately because they are national programmes.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans the Government have to introduce operating aid to assist the viability of commercial and industrial concerns in Assisted Areas; and if he will make a statement. [89183]

Mr. Wills: I have no such plans. The Government will, however, continue to offer selective financial assistance to firms investing in the Assisted Areas and creating or safeguarding jobs.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the Government's proposals for new regional selective assistance maps and regulations; and if he will take steps to expedite this matter. [89257]

Mr. Wills: The Government will announce their proposals for new Assisted Areas as soon as possible.

Bulgaria

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to promote trade with Bulgaria. [89302]

Mr. Wilson: My Department is actively involved in a number of initiatives to promote Bulgaria. Earlier this month the London Chamber of Commerce, supported by my Department, took 19 companies to Bulgaria. This was the largest ever trade mission to the market. Companies from the British Nuclear Industries Forum visited Bulgaria last week and my Department is also supporting the Department for the Environment's July mission of water sector companies. We will also be supporting the British stand at the annual Plovdiv Fair in September. Over the last year, we have assisted in strengthening bilateral trade and commercial relations by hosting visits to the UK by the Bulgarian Deputy Prime Minister and the Bulgarian Minister for Trade and Tourism. I had a bilateral meeting in March with the Bulgarian Minister for Trade and Tourism, which was then followed by a well attended business seminar at which we both spoke.

Under the Export Promoter initiative, my Department currently employs a private sector secondee to assist with our efforts to promote trade and investment with Bulgaria.

Companies (Liquidation)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms in the UK have ceased trading since May 1997. [89315]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 1 July 1999]: Companies House maintain statistics on the number of companies in liquidation and/or dissolution in England, Wales and Scotland. During the period from 5 May 1997 to 27 June 1999, 105,540 companies were reported as dissolved by means of the voluntary procedures contained in Section 652A of the Companies Act 1985 and 1989. 118,227 were dissolved other than by Section 652A and 38,554 were dissolved following liquidation, making a total of 262,321. As of 27 June 1999, 69,479 companies were in course of liquidation. (The corresponding figure for 4 May 1997 was 76,763.)

Telecom '99 Conference

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Minister in his Department plans to attend the Telecom '99 Conference to be held in Geneva from October 10 to 17. [89419]

Mr. Wills: Telecom '99 is an international trade fair which serves primarily as an opportunity for industry to meet and do business. There are no plans for a DTI Minister to attend this year's event. Officials from the Department will be present to provide support for UK industry members.

Trading Standards

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers the trading standards officers have to regulate the provision of services; and if he will make a statement. [89661]

Dr. Howells: Trading standards officers have powers to regulate the provision of services in a variety of sectors and transactions under existing consumer protection legislation. These cover services provided through retail outlets i.e. price marking legislation, legislation with respect to package travel etc. They are also responsible for monitoring the provision of services and transactions which may take place outside the retail environment—i.e. the Trade Descriptions Act, the provision of consumer credit, doorstep selling, time share schemes etc.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 10 May 1999 to the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie), Official Report, column 34, on what dates special advisers from his Department visited the United States of America; which of his special advisers took part in this visit; and if he will list the meetings which these special advisers held with members and officials of the US Government during this visit, specifying the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the US ministers and officials at each meeting. [88438]

Mr. Chris Smith: From 21 to 25 January 1998, special adviser Mr. John Newbigin visited the USA. He held no meetings with US Ministers or officials, but did meet with my right hon. Friend the Member for Coatbridge and Chryston (Mr. Clarke) and Steve Norris in Los Angeles. He also had meetings with John Calley, CEO of Sony Tristar, Bill Mechanic, CEO of 20th Century Fox, and senior executives at Paramount to discuss the emerging proposals from the Film Policy Review, in particular the idea of the All Industry Fund.

He also had meetings with Jack Valenti and most of the senior staff of the Motion Picture Association, also to discuss the Film Policy Review, and a meeting with Jeff Berg, the CEO of ICM who made his offer to help "sell" the film policy review to the US studios.

He had a presentation by Polygram of their activities in and plans for the US distribution market.

He had meetings with Paul Dimond, the UK Consul-General and with John Houlton to discuss the setting up of the LA Film Office. He attended a dinner at the Consulate to meet senior executives drawn from various sections of the US film industry.

Lottery Sports Funding

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if governing bodies of sports currently with a unified Great Britain governing body will need to split into English, Scottish and Welsh bodies in order to have guaranteed eligibility for funding for the World Class Start and World Class Potential programmes from the English, Scottish and Welsh sports councils. [89141]

Mr. Banks: The World Class Potential and World Class Start development programmes have been formulated by Sport England to support young athletes in England. Other home countries have developed their own Lottery Sports Funded talent development programmes. British or UK governing bodies will not need to separate into English, Welsh, or Scottish bodies in order to secure such development funding. They will need to identify the home country of each nominated athlete in order to direct a funding request to the relevant Sports Council.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what are the criteria set by the Government and the United Kingdom Sports Council for sports bodies to be included in the World Class Potential Programme; and on what basis basketball and hang-gliding are excluded. [89140]

Mr. Banks: Both basketball and hang-gliding are eligible to apply for Lottery Sports funding from the World Class Potential Programme. However, as World Class Potential funds are limited it may not be possible to meet the demands from all eligible sports, and priority will be given on the basis of criteria established by Sport England as the statutory distributor of Lottery Funds for Sport.

I understand that Sport England's criteria include: the status of the primary competition; the likely degree of sporting success to be achieved within 10 years; and the significance to the public of both a particular sport and any likely competitive success.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if the new financial directions for the allocation of Lottery funding will permit commercial organisations to obtain funds from the Lottery in order to fund non-commercial sporting activities; [89144]

(2) if, under the terms of the new financial directions for the allocation of Lottery funding, professional sporting bodies will be able to obtain funds for the non-professional side of their game. [89143]

Mr. Banks: Commercial organisations and professional sporting bodies are eligible to receive Lottery funds provided the projects for which Lottery funding is sought are intended to promote the public good, and are not intended primarily for private gain.

Liverpool Philharmonic

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on funding for the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society. [89589]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I am aware of the RLPO's current financial difficulties, and understand that the Arts Council, North West Arts Board and the relevant local authorities are working hard to secure the orchestra's long-term future.

Films

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the percentage of gross box office rentals currently received by film distributors. [89411]

Janet Anderson: My Department does not compile information of this type. However, a recent report prepared by London Economics for my Department estimated that film rentals as a percentage of gross box office ranged between 27 per cent. and 35 per cent. Some popular films may achieve rentals above this range.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions have taken place with independent British film distributors regarding the establishment and remit of the Film Council. [89412]

Janet Anderson: Representatives of the independent British film distributors were included in the consultation exercise on my Department's spending review, which covered the establishment and remit of the Film Council. The report of that spending review, and the earlier Film Policy Review, made clear that one of the main objectives of the Film Council will be to assist the development of sustainable industry structures in the area of distribution.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to ensure that films supported by the National Lottery are released through British-owned distributors. [89407]

Janet Anderson: Future policy on the distribution of Lottery-supported films will be set out in the strategic plan on which the new Lottery distributor, the Film Council, will consult my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The Film Council will consider a variety of issues in determining that policy, including the needs of the UK distribution sector; the importance of maximising public access to Lottery-supported films; and the importance of maximising the commercial benefits from the distribution of such films.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to replace the MEDIA II programme to provide support for independent film distributors. [89410]

Janet Anderson: It is for the European Commission to pub forward proposals for possible changes to the MEDIA II programme for member states to consider. Independent film distributors are eligible to receive support from the current MEDIA II programme to assist the trans-national distribution of European films.

Stonehenge

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the current status of his proposals for Stonehenge. [89434]

Janet Anderson: Our proposals for improving the setting and presentation of the Stonehenge World Heritage Site continue to make excellent progress, thanks to co-operation across Government and the support of English Heritage, the National Trust and other interested parties. On 23 April, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State formally launched both the Master Plan for the site and the marketing process for development of the proposed new visitor centre. On 25 June, my noble Friend, the Minister for Roads announced the preferred route for the A303 improvement scheme, which will remove traffic from the vicinity of the monument.

Landmark Projects

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the Millennium Commission grants paid to date to the Landmark projects; and if he will make a statement. [89399]

Janet Anderson: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member in his capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of his reply in the Libraries of the House.

BBC

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the conclusions of the panel conducting the review of the future funding of the BBC will be published before Summer Adjournment; and if he will make a statement. [89597]

Janet Anderson: The Panel has been asked to report by 30 July. My Department will publish the report as soon as we receive it.

WALES

Devolved Functions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on hill livestock compensation allowances; [89665]

(2) what is his assessment of the prospects for the export of Welsh beef; and if he will make a statement. [89666]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: These are matters for the National Assembly for Wales.

Rail and Bus Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he is taking to improve (a) rail services and (b) bus services in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [89669]

Mr. Hain: Rail and bus services regulations in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

The National Assembly for Wales is pursuing the development of bus and rail services in Wales.

Education Funding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what extra moneys he has given to each of the local education authorities of Wales since 1997; and if he will make a statement; [89667]

(2) what amounts of money each of the university colleges received in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [89668]

Mr. Hain: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the number of cattle herds with confirmed bovine tuberculosis breakdowns during 1998; how many were ongoing from 1997; and how many were on holdings with no previous breakdowns for 10 years. [87687]

Mr. Rooker: There were 740 new confirmed TB incidents in cattle herds in GB during 1998. The table shows this figure on a county basis. In the time available it has not been possible to identify either those herds in which no previous outbreak of TB has been recorded for 10 years, or how many were ongoing from 1997, but I will write to the hon. Member with the information when it is available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Polyostropathy

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for benefit under the industrial injuries scheme were refused on the grounds that polyostropathy is not a prescribed condition, in the last three years for which records are available. [88938]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available. Information is collected only about those diseases prescribed under the scheme.

Departmental Estate (Scotland)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list premises owned or rented by his Department and its agencies in Scotland, indicating the purpose of each building. [89078]

Mr. Timms: Early last year all of the Department's buildings throughout the UK, both freehold and leasehold, were transferred to the private sector under two separate Private Finance Initiative deals. We now no longer own or rent any of the buildings. Instead, we purchase serviced accommodation from our two private sector partners, Trillium and the Newcastle Estate Partnership.

The following is a list of all the buildings of which the Department is the main occupant in Scotland. The accommodation is maintained for the purposes of carrying out the business of the Benefits Agency, the Child Support Agency, the Information Technology Services Agency and the Independent Tribunal Service, accordingly.

Pensions

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints the Benefits Agency has received in the past year from people who were not paid their pensions, having reached pensionable age; what discussions he has had with the Benefits Agency about the prompt payment of benefits; and if he will make a statement. [89660]

Mr. Timms: The data requested are not available. In the 10 months up to 31 March 1999, the Benefits Agency target of processing 65 per cent. of its claims within 20 days was met in all but one of the months. Since April, the target has been 95 per cent. processed in 60 days and for April and May the percentages achieved were 94.9 and 94.7 respectively.

Over the last year, more than 10 million people who were receiving their pensions a year ago have continued to receive them without interruption. Ministers have both met with and received written progress reports from Benefits Agency officials on the potential impact on pension and other benefit claims of the delayed implementation of NIRS2. The Benefits Agency has started to review cases that have been affected by the delays in implementing NIRS2 as planned.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Double Jeopardy

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference for the Law Commission's review of the law on double jeopardy. [90048]

Mr. Straw: Following the recommendation in the Report on the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry, I have today formally asked the Law Commission to undertake a review of the law on double jeopardy. The terms of reference for this review are:

"To consider the law of England and Wales relating to double jeopardy (after acquittal), taking into account:

recommendation 38 of the Macpherson Report on the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry that consideration should be given to permit prosecution after acquittal where fresh and viable evidence is presented;

the powers of the prosecution to re-instate criminal proceedings; and also the United Kingdom's international obligations; and to make recommendations."

Drug Testing (Prisons)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average cost of (a) a litmus test and (b) laboratory analysis of urine taken for drug-testing purposes in prisons; [89473]

(2) what plans he has to expand the use of litmus tests in mandatory drug testing in prisons. [89472]

Mr. George Howarth: Recent contacts with companies marketing non-instrumented drug test devices (litmus tests) capable of testing for a group of drug types suggests that an average price of £6 per device would apply. The precise cost to the Prison Service for laboratory screening a similar group of drug types is commercial in confidence, although I can advise that it is comparable to that figure. However, if the result from a test is disputed, a more sophisticated and considerably more expensive confirmation test has to be carried out by a laboratory in order to meet the required standard of proof. The Prison Service uses laboratory screening because it produces the most reliable and consistent results and so minimises the number of confirmation tests required. For this reason the Prison Service does not authorise the use of non-instrumented drug test devices in mandatory drug testing.

Rape

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances, under the provisions of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Bill [Lords], the complainant in a rape trial could be denied screening from the defendant. [89664]

Mr. George Howarth: Under clause 17(4) of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Bill, all complaints in sexual offence trials will benefit from a presumption that they are eligible for help with giving evidence. As the clause is currently drafted, a complainant would be considered ineligible for help if the court was satisfied that the quality of his or her evidence was not likely to be diminished by fear or distress. However, I am considering whether the presumption in clause 17 could be strengthened.

Once a witness is deemed eligible, the court will go on to consider which (if any) of the special measures in the Bill, including screens, would be likely to improve the quality of his or her evidence. If it decides that a measure would improve the witness's evidence, it must award it. In reaching that decision, it will have to consider all the circumstances of the case. Those circumstances include the witness's views, and whether the measure might tend to inhibit the evidence being tested.

So a court could decide that a rape complainant should not be screened from the defendant for one of the following reasons: the witness was ineligible for special measures; the witness did not want to be screened; another measure (perhaps live link, or clearing the court) would be more likely to maximise the quality of the witness's evidence; screens might inhibit the ability of the defence to cross-examine the witness; or, for some other reason, in all the circumstances of the case, the quality of the witness's evidence would not be maximised by being screened from the defendant. Having said that, I would not expect courts to commonly refuse screens for rape complainants who want them.

Kosovar Refugees

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications have been lodged by Kosovars since 1 January; how many have been processed; and what were the outcomes. [89623]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is that in the period between January and May 1999 3,455 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom were made by nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, excluding dependants. 2,835 initial decisions were made, of which 2,165 were granted asylum and 165 were refused. 505 decisions were made under the pragmatic measures aimed at reducing the pre-1996 asylum backlog with the large majority being granted asylum and a small number exception leave to remain.

I regret that it is not possible to separately identify Kosovars within the available statistics for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovar refugees received in the United Kingdom have (a) been returned to Kosovo and (b) requested a return passage to Kosovo. [89619]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None of the refugees who have arrived under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Humanitarian Evacuation Programme have yet been returned to Kosovo. We have asked the International Organisation for Migration to begin taking registrations from those who want to return; so far there have been over 100 inquiries.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovar refugees have been received in the United Kingdom; if he will list the centres receiving Kosovar refugees; and how many Kosovar refugees have left the accommodation where they were originally housed on entering the United Kingdom. [89616]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 4,346 evacuees have been airlifted to the United Kingdom under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Humanitarian Evacuation Programme from Macedonia. Most have been housed in reception centres in the Midlands, the North of England and Scotland. Reception centres have been established in Ashton-under-Lyme, Barnsley, Blackburn, Bolton, Bradford, Bury, Cheadle, Clitheroe, Derby, Doncaster, Glasgow, Grimsby, Halifax, Harrogate, Hornsea, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, Manchester, Northwich, North Berwick, Oldham, Renfrew, Ripon, Rotherham, Runcorn, Sheffield, Southport, Stockport, Trafford, Ulverston, Wakefield and York.

424 refugees arriving under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme are not currently resident in reception centres.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of police-operated Closed Circuit Television cameras with forthcoming changes in European human rights legislation. [89352]

Mr. George Howarth: Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) schemes funded by the Home Office are governed by codes of practice and data protection legislation to ensure that the systems are operated fairly and lawfully, and with due regard to individual rights to privacy, as provided in Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights. The Human Rights Act 1998 will give further effect in United Kingdom law to the rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Convention. It will not create any substantive new rights. A properly regulated and controlled CCTV system should therefore fully comply with the requirements of the Act.

Video Appeals Committee

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom the Video Appeals Committee is responsible; who appoints its members; and if he will make a statement. [89662]

Mr. Straw: Section 4(3) of the Video Recordings Act 1984 requires the Secretary of State to be satisfied that adequate arrangements exist for appeals against classification decisions which submitting companies consider to be too strict. The Video Appeals Committee is the independent, appellate body set up for this purpose. Its members are selected by the British Board of Film Classification but it is independent of the Board and the Home Secretary. Although the Committee has no statutory authority, it has been the Board's practice to accept its decisions.

Ethnic Minorities (Local Authority Support)

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which authorities have received contributions of over 50 per cent. towards ethnic minority support under section 11 since 1995. [89438]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information is not readily available in the form requested. From 1 April 1995 until (except where shown) 31 March 1999, one or more projects run by the authorities shown in the table had a maximum section 11 grant allocation that was more than 50 per cent. of the minimum level of expenditure that needed to be incurred in order to attract that allocation. But, in many cases, actual expenditure exceeded the minimum level of expenditure, thus reducing the proportion of the total cost that was met by section 11 grant.

West Yorkshire Fire Authority

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specialised rescue appliances will be available in Bradford Metropolitan Area following the proposals made by West Yorkshire Fire Authority.

[89435]

Mr. George Howarth: Statutory responsibility for ensuring efficient fire services rests locally with the fire authority. However, the approval of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is required, under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947, if a fire authority wishes to close a fire station or reduce the number of its fire appliances or firefighting posts. West Yorkshire Fire and Civil Defence Authority applied on 23 April for his approval to the removal of four emergency tenders, including one in the Bradford Metropolitan Area, and associated firefighting posts. My right hon. Friend is considering this application in consultation with Her Majesty's Fire Service Inspectorate.

I understand from the Authority that all the pumping appliances in the Bradford Metropolitan Area have a rescue capability. One appliance has enhanced rescue capability and is termed a heavy rescue pumping appliance.

Within this financial year the Authority intends to deploy additional heavy rescue pumping appliances to Keighley and Odsal, replacing the existing rescue pumping appliances. In addition, for specialist rescue in the brigade area, there are two major rescue units strategically placed at Cleckheaton and Hunslet.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia (Arms Sales)

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the applications for arms sales to Indonesia which have been (a) allowed and (b) refused since 1 May 1997. [88590]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

Information on export licensing decisions between 2 May and 31 December 1997 was set out in the Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, published on 25 March by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1998 and 18 June 1999, 51 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 20 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Indonesia of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List.

In the same period, two applications for such SIELs were refused: one covering goods rated ML1 and the other covering goods rated ML3. No applications for such OIELs were refused in full.

Individual licences cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

In addition, the export to specified countries, including Indonesia, of specified goods on the Military List is permitted under certain Open General Licences; copies of all Open General Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Kosovo

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what analysis his Department has made on the effect of the present conflict on the trade and economies of those countries neighbouring Kosovo and Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [86060]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are in close touch with the countries of the region to assess the economic impact of the crisis and consider ways to help minimise its effects, working with our EU partners and the International Financial Institutions. The impact will vary widely from country to country. Within the EU, we have strongly supported the provision of additional assistance to the region. So far the European Commission has allocated 150m euros in humanitarian support and a further 100m euros in budgetary support.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to have further discussions with other European Ministers regarding the safety of civilian Serbs in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [89601]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We discuss regularly with our European partners issues relating to the safety of all ethnic minorities in Kosovo. KFOR are fully seized of the need to protect all Kosovo citizens. As NATO Secretary General Solana has stated:

> "KFOR will operate in an impartial and even-handed manner . . . [it] will not tolerate any . . . intimidation of any of the people of Kosovo".

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to publish a White Paper on the atrocities carried out in Kosovo during the Serbian rule. [89600]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our first priority is to investigate and establish the details of atrocities committed in Kosovo. Once that is done, we shall review how these details will be presented to Parliament.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions in the past four weeks on which (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department have travelled by official car on the M4 between Heathrow Airport and Chiswick roundabout. [89028]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 29 June 1999]: It is not our policy, for security and other considerations, to disclose the routes used by Ministers. But in the course of official business I inevitably travel frequently to Heathrow.

Sierra Leone

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assistance he is providing the Sierra Leone Government for the pursuit of perpetrators of war crimes; and if he will make a statement; [89606]

(2) what support his Department is providing for human rights in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [89607]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Britain continues to make clear to all parties in Sierra Leone the crucial importance of respect for human rights; and has consistently condemned human rights violations in Sierra Leone. We unreservedly condemn the appalling human rights abuses committed during the conflict in Sierra Leone. We look to the rebels to demonstrate remorse for the enormous suffering they have inflicted on the people of Sierra Leone.

Britain is leading the way in providing support for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Sierra Leone. For example, the emergency food, medicine, and disinfectant which Britain provided and distributed in the immediate aftermath of the rebel incursion into Freetown in January helped save lives and alleviate suffering.

Our latest £10 million package of assistance to Sierra Leone is helping the West African Peacekeeping Force, ECOMOG, to protect the people of Sierra Leone from rebel atrocities. We have made it clear that our support is conditional on ECOMOG and the Government of Sierra Leone respecting human rights.

We support the efforts being made to confront these issues in the current peace negotiations between the Government of Sierra Leone and the rebels. A long-term reconciliation process will be essential if lasting peace is to be achieved in Sierra Leone. We are ready to consider how we can best contribute to this process following a peace agreement, in support of the United Nations and others.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present operational status of the United Kingdom High Commission in Sierra Leone. [89605]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The British High Commission in Freetown is fully operational, with the exception of the Consular/Visa section. This section remains closed except for genuine emergencies, and will re-open as soon as a permanent Vice-Consul can arrive. We regret the inconvenience caused by the absence of a Vice-Consul, and are taking urgent steps to fill this staffing gap.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards encouraging the continued deployment of ECOMOG forces in Sierra Leone; what has been the total financial cost to ECOMOG of deployment to date; what has been the total (a) cost and (b) nature of United Kingdom support to ECOMOG; and if he will make a statement. [89657]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are providing considerable practical support for ECOMOG's efforts to consolidate the security situation in Sierra Leone. We believe that ECOMOG should continue to play an important role in providing security in Sierra Leone for the time being. We are encouraged by President Obasanjo's recent public commitment that Nigerian troops will remain in Sierra Leone until peace is guaranteed.

Since September 1998, Britain has provided over £4 million worth of practical logistic support to ECOMOG and the Government of Sierra Leone. As part of our new £10 million package of assistance, we have made available a further £5 million to provide further equipment for ECOMOG. We are providing logistic support in the form of vehicles and spares, boots, rations, tents, helicopter hours, and transportation of a new contingent, as well as light weapons and ammunition.

The question of the total financial cost to ECOMOG to date of its deployment in Sierra Leone is a matter for the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

Abkhazia

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards Abkhazia. [89612]

Ms Quin: The British Government are active in seeking a peaceful and lasting solution to the conflict in the region of Abkhazia, Georgia. We are members of the group known as the Friends of the UN Secretary-General, which supports the parties in their efforts to find a negotiated settlement to the conflict. Most recently, the British Ambassador in Tbilisi joined representatives of the other Friends of the Secretary-General and the parties in UN-sponsored talks in Istanbul from 7 to 9 June. The UK currently has seven military observers in a UN mission (UNOMIG) monitoring the ceasefire in co-operation with the CIS Peacekeeping Force. The British Government fully support a solution to the conflict based on the territorial integrity of Georgia, and maximum autonomy for the region of Abkhazia.

The Ossetias

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the Ossetias. [89610]

Ms Quin: It is the policy of the British Government, together with the rest of the international community, to recognise the North Ossetian Autonomous Republic as part of the Russian Federation and the region of South Ossetia as part of Georgia. We fully support the efforts of the OSCE in South Ossetia to find a lasting settlement to the unresolved conflict in the region.

Chechnya

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to encourage UK trade with Chechnya. [89613]

Ms Quin: The dangerous security situation in Chechnya limits opportunities for trade. Our strong advice is that visitors, including British business people, should not travel there because of the security risks. If a British company wished to trade with Chechnya without its staff travelling to the region, we would provide our normal services to British exporters.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effects of millennium compliance internationally on (a) 9 September 1999 and (b) 1 January 2000; and what measures he is taking to alleviate difficulties identified. [89608]

Mr. Hoon: The Government fully recognise the potential problems that might occur as a result of date-related computer and embedded chip failures. That is why we are working closely with our international partners especially in the EU and with the G8 to minimise the potential impact both in the UK and overseas. The conclusions of the G8 and EU Heads of Government meetings that took place in June set out clearly our priorities. A copy of both sets of conclusions can be found in the Library of the House.

Russia (Millennium Compliance)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current level of cooperation with Russia on millennium compliance; what is his assessment of the (a) readiness and (b) cost of Russian compliance; and if Russian (i) ballistic missiles and (ii) power stations are millennium compliant. [89604]

Mr. Hoon: As a member of the G8, Russia is working closely with its international partners to address the issue of millennium compliance across all sectors including energy and defence. It is not possible to give an accurate estimate of the costs involved. There is no evidence to suggest that ballistic missiles are affected by millennium date problems. The Russian electricity generation and distribution company has stated that it is increasingly confident that it will be able to continue to supply electricity over the date change period.

Chinese Embassy (Belgrade)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from his US counterpart following the statement by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in China concerning the bombing of the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade. [89351]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the proportion of people participating in the Training and Education Option of the New Deal who obtain unsubsidised employment after completion of their training; and if he will make a statement. [89433]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical Service figures show that, of the 42,100 young people who had entered full-time education and training by the end of April 1999, the majority—22,850 or 54 per cent.—were still on the option. Another 22 per cent.—or 9,270—were still on the New Deal and either on the point of entering another option or receiving intensive help to find a job. Of those young people who had left New Deal after participating in the FTET option, 54 per cent. with known destinations had entered jobs and roughly 27 per cent. of all leavers—including those who did not disclose a destination—had done so.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the future numbers of prospective New Deal recruits. [89432]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 253.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on (a) the advertising and public relations costs incurred in the promotion of the New Deal for the long-term unemployed in 1998–99 and (b) his estimate of the cost in 1999–2000. [89427]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The total cost of publicising New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds and 25 plus in 1998–99 was £9,776,188 as shown in the Departmental Report. The current forecast of spend in 1999–2000 is £1,750,000. There is also a balance of £1,952,000 from 1998–99 that is available for years 1999–2000, 2000–01, 2001–02; with year end flexibility of the Windfall Tax.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reports he receives on, and what assessment he has made of, the quality of recruits to the New Deal. [89425]

Mr. Andrew Smith: New Deal Statistical First Releases are published monthly covering 18–24 and 25 plus long-term unemployed clients and lone parents. These Statistical Releases give a range of information on the characteristics of recruits to New Deal, including educational achievement on entry, length of time on benefit, special needs, disability and ethnic group.

In addition, the wider evaluation of New Deal includes qualitative studies of the experience of individuals, based on interviews at each stage of the New Deal process. Copies of published evaluation findings are held in the Library.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what independent assessment he has commissioned of the quality of information about the New Deal. [89426]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Published statistics on the New Deal for unemployed people and the New Deal for Lone Parents are drawn from the New Deal Evaluation Database held by the Employment Service. These statistics are published under the auspices of the Government Statistical Service and conform to the standards laid out for the publication of official statistics—namely, that such statistics are processed, analysed, and disseminated in an unbiased, timely and independent manner.

In addition, the Database has been subject to rigorous internal checking with the result that no systematic errors have been identified. This conclusion is supported by a range of external contractors with whom the Database is shared.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with representatives of the Employment Service about the number of employers to be contacted about the New Deal. [89564]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As part of my regular discussions with the Employment Service on New Deal, a full and active campaign of advertising, mailshots and targeted direct contacts with employers was agreed.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the other known reasons for the departure of 9 per cent. of young New Deal participants as referred to in his Department's Statistical First Release /12/1999. [89418]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The other known reasons for young people leaving New Deal as referred to in the Statistical First Release are:

gone abroad
claimant deceased entered full-time education (other than as a New Deal option) approved training
starting non-New Deal Government Supported Training in prison/custody attending court on the witness protection programme partner working partner claiming client signed off voluntarily due to a fraud investigation client signed off when a JSA disallowance applied or client is over the maximum savings.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to increase the number of people who became self-employed after completing their participation in the New Deal. [89429]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are spreading best practice drawn from the successful experience of the increasing numbers already moving towards self-employment through New Deal.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he proposes to take to increase the supply of New Deal recruits. [89423]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Eligibility for the New Deal for Young People, and hence the number of young people taking part, is primarily determined by the number of young people who reach six months unemployment, although there is provision for early entry for young people with special needs including those with literacy and numeracy difficulties, disabled young people and ex-offenders.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the role of the Employment Service to date in the development of the New Deal. [89424]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employment Service has played a central role in getting the New Deal off to a good start: the total number of young people going into jobs had by the end of April 1999 reached 105,000; in addition over 70,000 young people have been helped to improve their employability through training and work experience; and more than 50,000 employers have signed up to support New Deal. These encouraging achievements reflect the great efforts which the Employment Service and its partners are putting into the New Deal.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the level of administration required to be carried out by employers for the operation of the New Deal. [89565]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The administration required of employers who are supporting New Deal was designed to keep bureaucracy to a minimum, while providing an audit trail to ensure public funds are protected and Value for Money achieved. We keep administrative process under review including examination by external consultants.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the respective shares of resources for the New Deal to be allocated to those aged (i) under and (ii) over 25 years. [89420]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The precise allocation of resources between our Welfare to Work programmes are kept under constant review. They are altered when necessary in light of experience of the programmes and labour market developments.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received from (a) the Trades Union Congress, (b) the Forum of Private Business, (c) the CBI, (d) the British Chamber of Commerce and (e) the Federation of Small Businesses regarding the New Deal for the long term unemployed; and what assessment he has made of them. [89428]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Department maintains a continuing dialogue on the New Deal with a wide range of organisations including those representing businesses large and small, and trade unions. The Government also receive valuable advice from the New Deal Task Force, chaired by Sir Peter Davis, and which includes members drawn from business, trade unions and the voluntary sector.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to increase the participation of (a) his Department and (b) other Government Departments in the New Deal. [89431]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have taken a number of steps to increase further New Deal participation by Government Departments. These include exchanging information and good practice through Departmental Establishment Officers, setting up a sub-group of the New Deal Task Force to propose ways to strengthen public sector involvement, and providing support and advice from the Employment Service. A number of Departments are also participating by working closely with New Deal in its promotion to key service and industrial sectors, eg construction, hospitality, retailing and manufacturing.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many invitations he and his departmental colleagues have received to speak on the continuation of grammar schools; and if he will make a statement. [89566]

Ms Estelle Morris: Ministers receive numerous invitations to speak on a variety of subjects. It is for local parents to decide whether or not they wish grammar schools to continue their current admission arrangements.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in National Insurance Contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88863]

Mr. Straw: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Home Office will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is, therefore, not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Home Office.

Ministerial Protection

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which class of vote covers expenditure incurred on protection of Ministers and other current and former parliamentarians; and what is the total of this expenditure in the current financial year. [88849]

Mr. Straw: The class of vote covering such expenditure is Class IV. It is not the practice to publish how much is spent on protective security measures as to do so would provide an indication of the level of security being provided.

Restaurant Health Inspections

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to include individual restaurant health inspection data in his Department's proposals for freedom of information. [89131]

Mr. Straw: Food hygiene inspections are conducted by local authority Environmental Health Officers under the Food Safety Act 1990. This Act does not prohibit the disclosure of inspection reports unless they contain confidential information.

Local authorities are public authorities within the meaning of the draft Freedom of Information Bill and will be required to apply the legislation to information requests when the Bill is enacted.

Clause 34(2) of the draft Bill exempts information from the right of access if disclosure would, or would be likely to, prejudice the commercial interests of any person. It is possible that inspection reports may fall for consideration under this exemption. But, even if the disclosure of a report is exempt by virtue of this clause, authorities would have a duty under clause 14 to consider, on a case by case basis, whether the information requested should be disclosed in the public interest.

In addition, under clause 6 of the draft legislation, public authorities would have a duty to adopt a publication scheme, which has regard to the public interest and must be approved by the Information Commissioner. Under clause 6, a local authority could agree with the Information Commissioner that such reports should be published as of right and if so, in what form and to what timetable.

Criminal Records Checks (Voluntary Sector)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of providing free access to criminal records checks for the voluntary sector; [89123]

(2) if he will review the decision to include the voluntary sector in charging for criminal records checks on people who want to work in the sector; [89122]

(3) what assessment he has made of the effects of charging for criminal records checks on the voluntary sector; [89121]

(4) when the Criminal Records Bureau will be established; [89124]

(5) what representations he has received on the effects of charging for criminal records checks on the voluntary sector. [89120]

Mr. George Howarth: It is intended that all applicants will be required to pay for certificates from the Criminal Records Bureau. We have received a large number of representations from voluntary organisations and individuals on this subject. We considered very carefully whether there was any way in which free checks could be provided for volunteers. Whilst we acknowledge the valuable contribution volunteers make, we have concluded that it will not be practicable to provide any free checks from the Criminal Records Bureau for volunteers or for any other groups. We realise that this is unwelcome news but providing free checks would prove an unsustainable burden on the public purse and may increase demand for certificates from the Bureau to an uncontrollable extent. In addition, we do not consider it would be fair to allow volunteers to have free certificates when there are other equally deserving groups such as the unemployed or the disabled.

It is difficult to estimate what the cost of free certificates would be to the Bureau, as it is not known how many volunteers would be required to apply for certificates, but the cost is potentially enormous. If checks were provided only to new volunteers seeking the higher levels of checks, the cost could exceed £10 million a year. If checks were extended to all existing volunteers, the cost could be between £40—£200 million. The cost of the fees for certificates from the Bureau will be kept to the minimum necessary to recoup costs and to provide a satisfactory service.

The Criminal Records Bureau is being established to enable checks to be carried out to help prevent unsuitable people from working with children or vulnerable adults. It will be for voluntary organisations to decide whether volunteers require a certificate, and a certificate will not obviate the need for voluntary organisations to carry out their own checks and references as part of normal recruitment procedures. However, the over-riding consideration at all times must be the protection of the vulnerable, and the service provided by the Criminal Records Bureau will help to achieve this. We do not believe that volunteering will diminish with the introduction of these checks.

The Bureau will be set up in Merseyside and work on implementation and timing is being taken forward.

M4 Bus Lane

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motorists have been (a) cautioned and (b) charged for using the new bus lane on the M4. [89174]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available.

Emergency Services

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time for an officer to answer the telephone to a 999 call for the (a) London Ambulance Service, (b) Metropolitan Police and (c) London Fire Service in (i) 1999 to date, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1997; what were the target times in each of those periods; and what percentage of calls met those targets. [89253]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not held centrally; however, the following information has been supplied by the London Ambulance Service, Metropolitan Police and London Fire Service:

The London Ambulance Service answers approximately 90 per cent. of 999 calls within five seconds. It aims to achieve a target of 95 per cent. of calls within five seconds by April 2000. 99 per cent. of calls are answered within 15 seconds.

The Metropolitan Police aims to answer 80 per cent. of calls within 15 seconds. In 1997, it answered 90.8 per cent. within target time; in 1998, 88.6 per cent; and to 30 June 1999, 80.2 per cent.

The London Fire Brigade aims to answer 90 per cent. of calls within 20 seconds. In 1997 it answered 93 per cent. of calls in 6 seconds; in 1998, 96 per cent. of calls in 4 seconds; and to 29 June 1999, 96 per cent. of calls in 3 seconds.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people charged with immigration offences were detained in prisons in England and Wales on 1 June. [89177]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information is for 31 May 1999 and shows that 480 persons were detained in prisons in England and Wales under the Immigration Act 1971.

Extradition Treaties

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries which do not have an extradition treaty with the United Kingdom. [89175]

Kate Hoey: Details of the United Kingdom's extradition arrangements are not available on this basis. Those countries with whom the United Kingdom has extradition arrangements follow. The Extradition Act 1989 enables special extradition arrangements to be made with foreign states with whom the United Kingdom has no extradition arrangements. In addition, there are a number of international conventions which allow for the extradition of fugitives between ratifying states for certain serious offences, even in the absence of an extradition arrangement.

Millennium Compliance (Kent Emergency Services)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that the computer systems in use by the Kent Fire Brigade are millennium compliant and that emergency services will not be affected on 1 January 2000. [89186]

Mr. George Howarth: The millennium preparedness of all fire brigades in England and Wales is subject to independent assessment by Her Majesty's Fire Service Inspectorate. The results, together with independent assessments of the millennium preparedness of the other emergency services and other key sectors of the national infrastructure, were reported to the Action 2000 National Infrastructure Forum on 21 April. Her Majesty's Inspectorate reported then that they expected all fire brigades in England and Wales to be fully prepared by September at the latest. That remains the case. The latest state of preparedness of each fire brigade will be reported at the next National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July, following which, I will forward further details to my hon. Friend.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that the computer systems in use by the Kent Police are millennium compliant and that law enforcement activities will not be affected on 1 January 2000. [89187]

Mr. Boateng: It is important that all police forces in England and Wales take every measure to ensure year 2000 compliance. The Home Office has commissioned an Independent Assessment of all forces, including Kent, by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary. The results of this survey will be published at the National Infrastructure Forum on 13 July.

Prisoners (Cell Confinement)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 428, what proportion of prisoners is confined for more than 22 hours a day in HMP (a) Birmingham, (b) Liverpool, (c) Dartmoor, (d) Feltham and (e) Swansea. [89287]

Mr. George Howarth: The precise numbers vary from day to day. The table gives the position on 29 June 1999.

Establishment	Total population[1]	Number of prisoners locked up for more than 22 hours	Percentage	Comment
Birmingham	1,070	476	44	8 for good order and discipline, 36 patients in the health care centre. The population of 1,070 is 336 more than Birmingham's certified normal accommodation and the shortage of out of cell activity is one result of holding this number of additional prisoners.
Liverpool	1,411	2	0.1	1 for good order and discipline, 1 refuses to leave the segregation unit.
Dartmoor	594	27	4.5	7 for good order and discipline, 10 held in segregation at own request, 10 unemployed. They are being encouraged to apply for work vacancies.
Feltham	799	13	1.6	All for good order and discipline.
Swansea	320	1	0.3	Patient in health care centre unfit for work or association.

Police Forces (Minority Group Consultation)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department has issued to police forces about consultation with minority groups in the communities which they serve; and if he will list those forces which have established procedures for liaison with (a) ethnic minorities, (b) lesbian, gay, and bisexual people, (c) disabled people and (d) transsexual and transgendered people. [89159]

Mr. Boateng: In December 1996, the Home Office Police Research Group published a report "It's Good to Talk: lessons in public consultation and feedback". This report looked at good practice in consultation and feedback on policing and provided advice to police authorities and forces in deciding how to undertake their consultation arrangements. It set out a matrix methodology to help each force and authority decide on the most appropriate arrangements, and included advice on how to consult with minority groups—particularly those who found it difficult to take part in the more formal consultation processes.

Extensive guidance has been issued on the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 which imposed new duties on police forces and local authorities to form partnerships to deal with crime and disorder. Consultation with local communities is a major aspect of these new duties and the guidance gives advice on the involvement of minority groups.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary's thematic report on police community and race relations "Winning the Race", published in October 1997, and the follow-up report "Winning the Race—Revisited", published in March 1999, also made recommendations on a number of issues including the need to have sound and representative public consultation processes—with particular reference to minority groups.

A survey of all forces undertaken as part of the inspection revealed that at the time of the second inspection (September 1998), 93 per cent. of forces had a strategy in place to consult minority groups. The remaining forces are developing their own strategies. Such strategies will not necessarily be specific to any one group but will encompass all groups within the local community. The issue will be looked at again when Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary carries out a further inspection of race and community relations in 2000.

The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has published guidelines for the police in dealing with gay and lesbian communities which includes advice on consultation arrangements.

Special Constabulary Complement

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people served in the special constabulary of each police force in each of the past five years for which figures are available. [89552]

Mr. Boateng: As at 31 March, the figures for the number of special constables in post in each police force area in England and Wales for the past five years were:

Motorway Accidents (Vehicle Removal)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legal basis exists (a) for the warning by the Association of Chief Police Officers that vehicles in motorway accidents or which have broken down must be removed within 30 minutes and (b) for the police to engage their own contractors and charge the owners to remove vehicles after this time limit; when these provisions will come into effect; and if he will make a statement. [89553]

Mr. Boateng: Police powers to arrange for the removal of vehicles from motorways are contained in the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 and the Removal and Disposal of Vehicles Regulations 1986. Under this legislation, the precise arrangements adopted by police forces for the safe recovery of vehicles from the motorway including the engagement of contractors to carry out this work are an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

In view of the increasing traffic flows on motorways and the associated dangers the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) issued guidelines in May this year which reduced the period of leeway which the police allow for the removal of vehicles from the motorway from two hours to 30 minutes. A memorandum of understanding has recently been agreed between the four main motoring organisations and ACPO whereby Greenflag, the Royal Automobile Club, Automobile Association and Britannia will aim to attend the scene of a breakdown on the motorway within 30 minutes.

Personal Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the progress made by the reviews (a) on retention of DNA profiles collected by the police from individuals for elimination purposes, (b) on the wider use of electoral roll personal data without the consent of the elector and (c) on the application of the national security exemption to the processing of personal data held by the Security Service for a purpose which relates to serious crime. [89653]

Mr. Boateng: We intend to issue a consultation paper shortly. The Working Party on Electoral Procedures, which has been looking at this alongside other issues, is expected to report to the Home Secretary later in the summer. Consideration is still being given to the exemptions for the Security Service that would be necessary under the Data Protection Act 1998. At this stage, it is not envisaged that the Security Service would rely on exemption provided by section 29 of the 1998 Act (crime and taxation).

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates since 1 July 1998 when the named veterinary surgeon appointed under section 7(5)(b) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 visited Harlan UK Ltd., indicating which visits were announced and which unannounced; and on which occasions he considered that the welfare of an animal gave cause for concern and so invoked the procedure laid down in section 7(b) of that Act. [89533]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office does not hold records concerning visits to establishments by the named veterinary surgeon. I understand, however, that the named veterinary surgeon for this establishment is employed on a full-time basis by the company and would, therefore, have been on site most days.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of beagles in animal experimentation. [89450]

Mr. George Howarth: Animals can be used in scientific procedures only where the benefits to humans, other animals or the environment outweigh the costs to the animals involved and where there are no suitable alternatives. Dogs (along with cats, primates and equidae) can be used only if animals of no other species are suitable or if it is not practicable to obtain animals of a suitable species. Unless otherwise authorised, only dogs acquired from designated breeding establishments can be used in scientific procedures.

In 1997, 7,490 scientific procedures were carried out on dogs (less than 0.3 per cent. of all procedures) of which 7,240 involved beagles. Of the 7,490 total, 4,581 were for assessing the safety or efficacy of pharmaceuticals and 1,738 were for pharmaceutical research and development.

No-one likes to use animals in scientific procedures and particularly dogs. However, their use in some procedures is still essential in medical research and testing. The aforementioned figures indicate the important areas of work in which the vast majority of dogs are used.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will (1) make a statement on the findings of the recent British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection report into Harlan UK Ltd in relation to alleged infringements of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; [89534]

(2) instigate an investigation into Harlan UK Ltd. to establish whether infringements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 have occurred; [89535]

(3) list the dates since 1 July 1998 when his Department's Inspectorate has visited Harlan UK Ltd. under section 18(2)(d) of the Animals (Scientific Proceedings) Act 1986, indicating which visits were announced and which unannounced; and what reports were made to him in accordance with section 18(2)(e) of that Act; [89531]

(4) make a statement on the death of two primates en route from Oxford University to Harlan UK Ltd. [89449]

Mr. George Howarth: We have received, and are studying, a detailed report provided, on 29 June, by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection (BUAV). An investigation into the allegations made has already been launched and I have asked for urgent advice on whether there is a need to suspend—under the powers granted by section 13 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986—the establishment's certificate of designation.

A comprehensive and thorough investigation will be carried out. It will be led by a senior member of the Home Office Inspectorate unconnected with this establishment. This could take two or three months to complete, but I will be receiving interim reports.

In addition to the standards of care and welfare of animals, the BUAV report criticises the Home Office Inspectorate. These allegations will be considered during the investigation.

I will be advising the Animal Procedures Committee of the outcomes in due course.

It would be wrong to pre-judge the outcome of the investigation and I will not, therefore, comment further at this time. However, I give the hon. Member my assurances that if any of the allegations of contraventions of the Act; of the terms and conditions of licences or certificates; or of the Codes of Practice are substantiated appropriate action will be taken to rectify the problems and to prevent recurrence. No options have been ruled out at this stage.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he is taking to end the practice whereby more animals are bred for research purposes than are used in experiments; [89448]

(2) if he requires research, breeding and supply establishments to keep full records detailing the numbers of research animals killed each year, and where such animals have had their (i) blood, (ii) tissue and (iii) organs sold; [89455]

(3) if he will make it a requirement under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 for establishments to keep full records of (i) the number of animals bred for research purposes and (ii) the number of such animals subsequently destroyed without being so used. [89454]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer to the reply that I gave the hon. Member on 30 November 1998, Official Report, columns 80–81.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many project licences issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedure) Act 1986 are currently in force at Harlan UK; and how many of these are classified as (a) mild, (b) moderate and (c) substantial severity. [89532]

Mr. George Howarth: There are currently two project licences in force that have primary availability at this establishment—i.e. it is the main place at which procedures are carried out under the authority of the licence. One of these is of mild severity and one moderate. There are a further 22 project licences that have primary availability elsewhere, but that have secondary availability at this establishment. Eleven of these are of mild severity and the remainder are moderate.

Drivers (Drug-testing Kits)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when plans he has to introduce drug-testing kits for police to check people suspected of driving under the influence of drugs. [89746]

Mr. Boateng: We have no current plans to introduce such kits, but tests have been carried out on some to assess their practicality for police use and further work is being undertaken to develop a specification for a roadside screening device.

Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria which he is currently applying to decisions to extend expired passports for two years; and what plans he has to review these criteria. [89866]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The criteria are as follows:

Where children are included on passports, they can be:

extended until the date of the eldest child's sixteenth birthday so long as there is a minimum of six months, or extended for two years so long as all the included children are 14 years or younger.

Children included on a passport require their own passport when they reach the age of 16.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates since 2 May 1997 on which the Chief Executive of the Passport Agency submitted his quarterly reports to ministers. [89865]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 2 May 1997, the Chief Executive has submitted his quarterly reports to Ministers on the following dates:

Period	Date Submitted
April to June 1997	11 August 1997
July to September 1997	18 November 1997
October to December 1997	12 February 1998
January to March 1998	12 May 1998
April to June 1998	6 August 1998
October to December 1998	1 February 1999
January to March 1999	19 May 1999

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the present members of the Passport Agency's Advisory Board. [89863]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The present members of the Passport Agency's Advisory Board are:

Mike Elland

Deputy Director General, Immigration and Nationality Directorate, Home Office (Chairman)

Keith Ackroyd

Former Managing Director, Boots Retail Division

Malcolm Davidson

Former Managing Director, Littlewoods Pools

Robert Fulton

Principal Finance Officer, Home Office

Linda Lockyer

Director Corporate Resources, Home Office.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates on which (a) the Passport Agency's Management Board and (b) the Passport Agency's Advisory Board have met since 2 May 1997. [89864]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested on meetings of the Passport Agency's Management Board, and its Advisory Board since 2 May 1997 are as follows:

Advisory Board

Year	Dates
1997	30 July, 30 October
1998	28 January, 29 April, 29 October
1999	28 January, 28 April

Management Board

Year	Date
1997	19 May, 23 June, 2 July, 21 July, 18 August, 28 August, 15 September, 20 October, 17 November, 15 December
1998	19 January, 16 February, 16 March, 20 April, 18 May, 22 June, 20 July, 17 August, 16 September, 19 October, 9 November, 21 December
1999	18 January, 22 February, 22 March, 20 April, 17 May, 21 June

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy during the present delays at the Passport Agency to waive or reimburse the £10 additional fee due from applicants in person; and if he will make a statement. [89843]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 30 June that for any applicant calling personally at a passport office who applied more than two weeks ago, and had not yet received their passport, the £10 additional fee for personal applications would be waived.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to allow in urgent circumstances the two year extension of passports which include the names of children aged under 16 years; and if he will make a statement. [89844]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The arrangements to extend passports by two years includes passports where children are included.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone calls were made to the UK Passport Agency in June; and how many of those received the Agency's courtesy message. [89846]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Passport Agency has information only up to 25 June. Up to that date, the Agency had received 914,580 telephone calls, of which 621,915 received a courtesy message.

Martin McGartland

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the Northumberland Police in identifying those involved in the attempted murder of Martin McGartland at Whitley Bay on 17 June; and if he will make a statement. [89356]

Mr. Boateng: The investigation into this crime is a matter for the Chief Constable of Northumbria Police. I understand, however, that at the present time there is no firm evidence to establish responsibility for the shooting and inquiries are, therefore, continuing.

Child Care Workers (Criminal Offences)

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people working with children who have been convicted of a criminal offence received sentences of (a) custody, (b) community service and (c) probation; and in each case of what lengths, in each of the last 10 years; [89267]

(2) how many people working with children have been (a) arrested for and (b) convicted of a criminal offence broken down by category of offences in each of the last 10 years; [89266]

(3) if he will estimate the cost to public funds for each of the last 10 years of those people working with children who have been convicted of a criminal offence and who have received (a) a custodial sentence, (b) a suspended sentence, (c) community service, (d) a conditional discharge, (e) an absolute discharge, (f) a fine, (g) a probation sentence and (h) a police caution; [89270]

(4) if he will estimate the cost to public funds for each of the last 10 years of those people working with children who have been convicted of a criminal offence and who have subsequently re-offended; [89269]

(5) how many people working with children who have been convicted of a criminal offence have subsequently re-offended in each of the last 10 years; [89268]

(6) how many people working with children who have been convicted of a criminal offence have received (a) a suspended sentence, listing the length of that suspension and the sentence, (b) a police caution, (c) a fine, and of what value, (d) an absolute discharge and (e) a conditional discharge in each of the last 10 years. [89265]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available as details about an offender's occupation are not recorded on the Home Office Cautions and Court Proceedings Databases.

Personation

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the level of personation in (a) the 1999 European elections, (b) the 1997 general election and (c) the 1999 local elections. [89442]

Mr. George Howarth: No arrests have been made for personation at either the 1999 European Parliamentary elections or at the local elections held in May 1999. We know of only two proven cases at the 1997 General Election, one of which resulted in prosecution and a substantial fine.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the extent of changes to energy savings targets for industrial sectors between 1990 and 2010; what proportion of the changes will have resulted from (a) adjustments in the economy and (b) the climate change levy; and if he will make a statement. [88011]

Mr. Battle: The Government intend to set significantly lower rates of the climate change levy for energy intensive sectors that agree targets for improving energy efficiency. Detailed negotiations on these targets are now underway with a number of industrial sectors with the intention of reaching agreement in October 1999.

Over the period 1990–2000, the Government's climate change consultation paper estimated that about 70 per cent. of the fall in industrial carbon dioxide emissions relative to the increase in GDP is the result of large-scale fuel switching in electricity supply. Around three quarters of this fall is the result of the introduction of gas fired generation and the remainder from improved productivity of nuclear power and increased renewable energy. A further 10 per cent. can be attributed to changes in the UK's industrial structure and some 20 per cent. comes from improvements in energy efficiency.

The climate change levy is expected to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010.

Future reductions in greenhouse gases to 2010 from different sectors will depend on the policies and measures adopted as part of our climate change programme.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he will take to ensure that gas and electricity prices are competitive within the European Union after the climate change levy is introduced; and if he will make a statement. [88012]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to the promotion of competition in energy markets which will maintain downward pressure on pre-tax prices.

The White Paper "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation" sets out the Government's broad energy policy, including radical reforms to the electricity market. These reforms will bring greater competition to the wholesale market and lower prices for consumers. New arrangements to improve the competitiveness of the gas market will be introduced in October this year.

Proposals for the climate change levy also recognise the need to have regard to the competitiveness of UK industry. The Government intend to set substantially lower rates of levy for those energy intensive sectors that enter into negotiated agreements on their energy use and emissions.

Specialist Shops

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment his Department has made of the continuing commercial viability of small and specialist shops in small and medium-sized towns; and if he will make a statement; [88614]

(2) what financial assistance is available from his Department to support small and specialist shops in (a) small and medium-sized towns and (b) Bewdley; and if he will make a statement. [88613]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Small and specialist shops are crucial to the economic, environmental and social development of small and medium-sized towns. They provide employment, regenerate the economy of town centres and have an important role to play in providing a service to those living and working in urban areas, particularly the disadvantaged, or those who may be socially excluded.

The Urban White Paper published on 29 June will consider the effects of new technology on the retail sector and this is likely to include the role of small shops.

In addition several Single Regeneration Budget schemes have an impact, either directly or indirectly, on retail sectors within small and medium-sized towns in the West Midlands region. Other assistance available to small businesses throughout the region includes schemes in Staffordshire, Hertfordshire, Shropshire and Worcestershire that offer a mix of business services and support.

Financial Transactions

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions he has had with representatives of banks and credit card operators about liberalising regulations regarding use of credit cards for e-commerce transactions with internet firms with a limited trading history; [89318]

(2) what discussions he has had with representatives of banks and building societies regarding the raising of existing and the introduction of new charges for over the counter transactions and use of cash dispensing machines. [89317]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 1 July 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has held no discussions.

Platform Lifts

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action is being taken by his Department in response to the proposals being considered by the EC to transfer regulation of platform lifts from the Health and Safety Directive to the Lift Directive. [89546]

Mr. Battle: It is assumed that the question refers to the Machinery Directive (98/37EC) and to the Lifts Directive (95/16/EC). The Services of the European Commission have been preparing a draft Proposal for simplification of the Machinery Directive but no formal Proposal for amending the Machinery Directive has been adopted yet by the Commission or presented to the Council of Ministers.

It is understood that the measure may seek to clarify the scope of the Directive in relation to a number of other Single Market Directives including the Lifts Directive.

The Government would welcome simplification and clarification in principle but would need to study the precise terms of any such Proposal before they could give a view on their merits.

Agency Nursing

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the competition implications of agency nursing. [89380]

Dr. Howells: There has been no such assessment carried out either by my Department or by the Office of Fair Trading.

British Coal

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the competitiveness of British coal in (i) the European and (ii) the international market; and if he will make a statement. [89387]

Mr. Battle: The Government do not collect statistics on UK coal production costs. We understand that, on average, UK coal is produced at costs which are roughly a third of German production costs, and a quarter or less of Spanish costs. Unlike the German and Spanish coal industries, the UK coal industry receives no state aid.

Outside the European Union the picture is different. The delivered cost of UK deep-mined coal is currently reported to be around a quarter to a third higher than the delivered price of internationally traded coal, much of which also has a lower sulphur content than most British coal.

The competitiveness of the industry is not determined purely by its costs, but also depends on factors including location, security of supply and the precise characteristics of the coal required.

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to support and encourage the export of British coal. [89386]

Mr. Battle: British Trade International, the new unified DTI/FCO operation, has lead responsibility within Government for trade promotion and development on behalf of British business and aims to help UK firms take full advantage of overseas business opportunities by providing support, information, advice and assistance throughout the exporting process.

The Government seek to ensure that there is an open and competitive market for coal and coal products across the EU, and to ensure that markets are not distorted by products which do not reflect their production and transport costs. To this end we have encouraged the European Commission to take action against such marketing practices which are supported by unauthorised state aid where there is damage to the export prospects of British coal.

Classic Cars

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what exemptions are available to classic car owners from the European End of Life Vehicles Directive. [89436]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 2 July 1999]: The proposed End of Life Vehicles Directive would provide for improved recycling and treatment standards for vehicles when they have become waste (as defined under existing legislation). In other words, it would apply only when the owners have decided to discard them. For this reason, no exemptions would be needed for classic cars, and the European Commission has therefore not proposed any such exemptions.

At the Environment Council on 24 June, it was decided to put back a decision on a Common Position on the Directive until the next Environment Council meeting, in recognition of the German Government's concerns over the approach adopted to producer responsibility.

DEFENCE

Efficiency Savings

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 382, on efficiency savings, when he will write to the hon. Member. [87586]

Mr. George Robertson: The figures that the hon. Member has requested on savings measures are currently being validated for consideration by my Department's Ministerial Efficiency Steering Group. Once that exercise is complete, I shall write to the hon. Member. As my Department has supplied an illustrative list of efficiency measures for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 to the House of Commons Defence Select Committee, I am unable to make that information available to him until after the Committee have published the information in a Commons Daily Part. We expect that the Committee will make this information available to the House within the next week.

US National Ignition Facility

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if United Kingdom involvement in the US National Ignition Facility replaces proposals to develop a high powered laser facility at AWE Aldermaston; [87694]

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Ms Stuart) of 9 June 1999, Official Report, columns 329–30, how much Britain has invested to date in the US National Ignition Facility; and what further investment is planned in each of the next five years; [87693]

(3) if he will list the laser facilities in existence, under construction and proposed for the future at AWE Aldermaston, indicating their primary purpose and how they differ from the US National Ignition Facility. [87695]

Mr. George Robertson: My Department has concluded that, as the cost of building a domestic laser of sufficient power would be unaffordable, we should, in the absence of nuclear testing, invest in the US National Ignition Facility, NIF, in order to make use of its facilities. The precise details of our investment in the NIF have yet to be formalised in a contract with the US. The information requested is, therefore, commercially sensitive. I can, however, say that the investment, to cover a shot rate enhancement programme and the design and construction of a UK target chamber, will be in the region of £100m. This represents an affordable and cost-effective way of discharging the undertaking we gave in the Strategic Defence Review that we would ensure the safety and reliability of our nuclear weapons.

No new laser facility is under construction or planned for AWE Aldermaston. The present laser at Aldermaston, generally known as Helen and opened in 1979, has been used to research the principle of techniques to underwrite the integrity of nuclear warheads in the absence of nuclear testing. It is based on older technology than the NIF which is 600 times more powerful. Helen will be retained until access to NIF is obtained.

Russian Missile Propulsion System

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has evaluated on the Russian ramjet propulsion system for a beyond visual range air to air missile. [88086]

Mr. George Robertson: The MOD has been aware of the development of a Russian ramjet propulsion system for a beyond visual range air-to-air missile since 1993, when a model, designated RVV-AE-PD, was displayed at the Moscow Airshow. During this year's Paris Airshow, the weapon itself was displayed. Representatives stated that the missile, which is a privately funded programme, had completed testing including ground-launched firings against a target. Air-launched firings had not been carried out due to the high costs involved. They also confirmed that it was now ready to go into production although they had no customers, either in Russia or elsewhere.

We continue to assess the capabilities of this weapon, the development of its associated ramjet propulsion system and the scope for its deployment.

Rosyth (Trident)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the emergency dry-docking facility for Trident at Rosyth; and if he will make a statement. [88133]

Mr. George Robertson: Construction work on the Trident contingency docking facility is complete and the facility is in good shape for contingency use to support a Trident docking.

Trawlerman IT Project

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on the Trawlerman IT project; for what reasons it was abandoned without use; and if he will make a statement. [88134]

Mr. Spellar: A fixed price contract was let in July 1988 and ultimately the MOD spent £42 million on the Trawlerman IT project. The project experienced serious technical difficulties and delays such that, by the time it was delivered in May 1995, some $3\frac{1}{2}$ years late, it was obsolete. The problems experienced by this project go back to the early 1990s. The Department subsequently acquired a replacement system at a fraction of the cost (£6 million), using a modern off-the-shelf design and applying the lessons learned from the experience of Trawlerman. Lessons have been learnt and procurement procedures have been improved with the introduction of the Smart Procurement Initiative launched earlier this year under the Strategic Defence Review. Further information is contained in the Eighteenth Report, Session 1988–99 of the Committee of Public Account on the Ministry of Defence: Appropriation Accounts 1997–98.

Sellafield

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use is made of the plutonium recycling facilities at Sellafield for plutonium from old nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement. [88143]

Mr. Spellar: No use is made of facilities at Sellafield for the recycling of plutonium from decommissioned nuclear weapons. The recovery of this material is undertaken at the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

US Atomic Co-ordinating Offices

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual operating costs of the US Atomic Co-ordinating Offices in London and Washington; and how many staff are currently employed in each office. [88135]

Mr. George Robertson: The details requested are as follows:

Atomic Control Office, London

Staff	Number
Senior Executive Officer	[1]0.5
Executive Officer	1
Administrative Officer	1
Administrative Assistants	4

[1] This official has other duties in addition to his responsibilities as Head of Atomic Control Office, London

Atomic Co-ordinating Office, Washington

Staff	Number
Unified Grade 6	1
Unified Grade 7	1
Executive Officer	1
Administrative Officer	1

The annual running costs of the London and Washington offices are £122,000 and £263,000 respectively.

Joint Working Groups (USA)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide (a) a list of all joint working groups with the United States Department of Defense currently in existence, (b) a brief explanation of the purpose of each one and (c) the number of meetings that have occurred in the last two years. [88131]

Mr. George Robertson: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Trident

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will explain the purpose of payments made to the US Government under the heading Trident Refit Feasibility Study; and if he will provide the total cost of this item. [88144]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence gave him on 28 July 1998, Official Report, columns 200–02. The total we expect to pay for these studies remains in the region of £850,000, subject to exchange rate variations.

Airlift Programme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies will be on the tender list for the Strategic Short-Term Airlift Programme; and when the list will be announced. [88311]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence received expressions of interest from nine companies in response to the MOD Contracts Bulletin published in July 1998. The Invitation to Tender was issued to seven companies on 30 September 1998. Five tenders were received by the closing date of 29 January 1999 from Air Foyle, Airbus Transport International, Boeing in conjunction with British Aerospace, IBP Airlift Ltd. and Rolls Royce. The tenders are currently being assessed.

Antonov 124

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Antonov 124 has military aircraft release. [88309]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently two variants of the Antonov 124: the basic version used by the Russian armed forces and others, and the An 124–100 used by civil operators. Neither has a UK Military Aircraft Release.

Kosovo

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many targets were hit in Montenegro; and of what types. [88456]

Mr. George Robertson: UK forces were involved only in attacks on Podgorica airfield.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the destruction as a result of NATO action of civilian infrastructure in Montenegro; and if he will make a statement. [88457]

Mr. George Robertson: No estimate has been made of any damage to the civilian infrastructure of Montenegro during the course of the air campaign. NATO targeted only military related objectives.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of cluster bombs dropped by NATO in Operation Allied Force on Kosovo that did not explode; and what methods are being used to locate and disarm the unexploded NATO ordnance in Kosovo. [88597]

Mr. George Robertson: I am not in a position to comment on NATO air forces as a whole. However, the RAF dropped some 500 RBL755 cluster weapons during Operation Allied Force, each containing 147 bomblets. Research trials of the equivalent weapon (BL755) when used at low level indicate that approximately 5 per cent. of the bomblets are likely to fail to detonate. However, when used at medium level as during Operation Allied Force, the failure rate is expected to be lower given that the impact angles and velocities are greater, and could be as low as 1 per cent.

UK explosive ordnance disposal operators use visual and sub surface instrument detection to locate unexploded ordnance. The preferred disposal method is to destroy the ordnance in situ.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest assessment of (a) the extent of contamination of land in Kosovo by land mines, unexploded ordnance and improvised explosive devices and (b) the risk posed by these to returning refugees and displaced persons. [87374]

Mr. George Robertson: The full extent of the problem has yet to be determined. However, there is considerable contamination of the land in Kosovo, particularly by land mines, and especially in border areas. These pose a serious threat to everyone in Kosovo. Known areas are being marked and a mine awareness programme is being implemented, which includes advice on minimising the risk from mines and unexploded ordnance.

Front-line Troops

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his projection on the strength of the Army in terms of front-line troops, for the next three years, taking into account any increase in premature voluntary release which may occur as a result of the extra deployments in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [88622]

Mr. Doug Henderson: [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The forecast of trained strength of the Army over the next three years is:

Year	Amount
April 2000	100,271
April 2001	102,058
April 2002	103,670

The figures represent the forecast of all UK trained Army personnel and Gurkha trained personnel. "Frontline" is not a recognised description of any part of the Army.

Although it is still too early to measure the effect of deployment of troops to Kosovo on Premature Voluntary Release (PVR) rates, we are taking a number of measures to reduce overstretch, which is recognised as one of the causes of high PVR rates.

Yugoslav Military Equipment

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of how many Yugoslav (a) tanks, (b) surface-to-air missiles, (c) fighter aircraft, (d) armoured infantry fighting vehicles, (e) armoured personnel carriers, (f) towed artillery pieces, (g) self propelled artillery pieces and (h) helicopters were destroyed in (i) Kosovo, (ii) the Republic of Serbia, excluding Kosovo and (iii) Montenegro during Operation Allied Force. [88782]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 30 June 1999, Official Report, column 160 to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell).

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89161]

Mr. George Robertson: My Department introduced into Parliament three statutory instruments in 1998, six in 1992, five in 1985, and four in 1973. None had the European Union as its legislative source.

Centre for Defence Medicine

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects an invitation to tender to be issued to the seven NHS trusts recently shortlisted by his Department as potential partners for the Centre for Defence Medicine; and if he will make a statement. [90047]

Mr. Doug Henderson: An Invitation to Tender is being issued today to the following NHS Trusts:

Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospital Trust

Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust

North Bristol NHS Trust

Oxford Radcliffe Hospitals

The Lothian University Hospitals Trust (Edinburgh)

The Newcastle-Upon-Tyne Hospitals NHS Trust

University Hospitals Birmingham Trust.

The Trusts were selected by my Department from an original list of 18 that had expressed interest in becoming the host for the Centre for Defence Medicine. Tenders will be due for return by 5 October 1999.

The issuing of the Invitation to Tender is an important milestone in the development of the Centre for Defence Medicine, whose establishment is a fundamental element of the new strategy for the Defence Medical Services announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence in December 1998. The Centre will have important academic, research and training roles as well as a significant clinical function, and will become a professional focus for medical personnel in the Armed Forces. We also envisage that the Centre will develop an international reputation for excellence in military medicine. Our aim is to have the formal Customer Service Agreement in place with our chosen partner by 1 April 2000 with a view to opening the Centre for Defence Medicine on 1 April 2001.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Common Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1999, Official Report, column 264, concerning the purposes of the proposed European Union Political and Security Committee and associated Institute for Security Studies, if he will list (a) the date, nature, status and attendance of the meeting at Petersberg, (b) the ministerial attendance from the United Kingdom, and reference to the consequential statement in any parliamentary proceeding and (c) the scope and definition of the tasks in executing an integrated and single Union policy for foreign defence, security and military activity in aid of peace keeping and crisis management as defined in the consolidated Treaty on European Union. [88683]

Mr. Hoon: The meeting at Petersberg was a ministerial meeting of the Western European Union. It took place on 19 June 1992. The United Kingdom was represented by the right hon. Douglas Hurd MP, then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, and the right hon. Malcolm Rifkind MP, then Secretary of State for Defence.

The Treaty on European Union provides for the Union to define and implement a common foreign and security policy, covering all aspects of foreign and security policy: and for the common foreign and security policy to include all questions related to the security of the Union, including the progressive framing of a common defence policy, and that this shall include humanitarian and rescue tasks, peacekeeping tasks and tasks of combat forces in crisis management, including peacemaking. These are the "Petersberg tasks". The Treaty on European Union further provides for the Union to avail itself of the Western European Union to elaborate and implement actions of the Union which have defence implications.

The "Petersberg tasks" are referred to in the European Council Declaration on Strengthening the Common European Policy on Security and Defence issued at Cologne on 4 June. The Declaration also outlines the objectives of future work within the European Union in order to enable the European Union to undertake these tasks.

Sudan

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his officials recently met representatives of the Government of the Sudan; what was discussed; when normal diplomatic relations will be restored; and if he will make a statement. [89150]

Mr. Hoon: Dr. Hassan Abdeen, Under-Secretary at the Sudanese Ministry of External Relations, visited London during the week beginning 21 June. He paid a courtesy call on me and had other meetings with officials.

Discussions covered a wide range of issues and on 25 June a joint statement was released announcing agreement to the return of British and Sudanese staff to Khartoum and London. This is an important step in normalising relations between the two countries.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of the state of the ceasefire in the Nuba Mountains, Southern Blue Nile and Western Upper Nile regions of Sudan. [89523]

Mr. Hoon: The ceasefire in southern Sudan, first agreed during the visit to the region of the late Derek Fatchett in July 1998 and recently confirmed at a meeting between the UN, the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Peoples Liberation Army, relates to Bahr el Ghazal.

We shall continue to press for a comprehensive ceasefire throughout Sudan.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the treatment of Sudanese people in the peace camps in the Nuba Mountains in Sudan. [89520]

Mr. Hoon: Owing to the difficulty of access, we receive few reports on the situation in the Nuba Mountains. However, a UN assessment mission did visit very recently. I look forward to seeing their report.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the progress of oil excavations in southern Sudan by Western oil companies. [89524]

Mr. Hoon: Oil exploration has been going on in southern Sudan for some time. A pipeline has recently been built from fields to the Red Sea coast. I understand that oil is likely to flow through the pipeline in the near future.

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89167]

Ms Quin: The total number of Statutory Instruments (SIs) registered as General Instruments in 1998, 1992, 1985 and 1973 is listed in the following table. I have indicated where information is available, the number of SIs which were made by my Department to comply with European Community obligations.

Year	Number of SIs	Number implementing EC obligations
1998	1,565	5
1992	1,692	2
1985	1,204	3
1973	1,260	2

Loizidou v. Turkey Judgment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the Loizidou v. Turkey judgment by the European Court of Human Rights. [89389]

Ms Quin: Responsibility for implementing the judgment in Loizidou v. Turkey lies with Turkey. We take such responsibilities seriously, as with all obligations in the Council of Europe, and expect other members to do likewise. We continue to make clear to Turkey, including in the Committee of Ministers' Deputies, the need to respect the Court's judgment.

The Chairman of the Committee of Ministers' Deputies wrote to the Turkish Foreign Minister on 22 June requesting information on how Turkey intended to satisfy its obligations in this case. The Government fully supported this action.

Kosovo

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civilian Serbs in Kosovo have been unlawfully killed since NATO troops entered. [89602]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 2 July 1999]: KFOR are aware of a number of incidents where Serb civilians have been killed by Kosovo Albanians and are taking measures to ensure the security of all citizens. At present, no verifiable figures are available.

As the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 2 July 1999, Official Report, column 314 made clear, steps are being taken to reassure Serb civilians in Kosovo.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to establish an armed international police force in Kosovo. [89603]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 2 July 1999]: UN Security Council Resolution 1244 authorised the UN Secretary General to establish an international civil presence in Kosovo, with responsibility inter alia for maintaining civil law and order, including through the establishment of local forces and meanwhile through the deployment of international police personnel. It was agreed at the Friends of Kosovo meeting in New York on 30 June that the United Nations Mission in Kosovo should acquire the capacity to take over responsibility for public security from KFOR as soon as possible.

The UN Secretariat has recommended that UN police officers serving in Kosovo should be armed for self-defence purposes, but has left the final decision to UN members. The Foreign Secretary has already announced that the UK is willing to provide 60 police officers to recruit, to train and to monitor a civil police force in Kosovo.

Indonesia

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role the Government played in monitoring the recent elections in Indonesia; and if he will make a statement. [89207]

Mr. Hoon: We provided almost £2m in electoral assistance to Indonesia, making us the fourth largest national contributor overall and the largest European contributor. Bilateral projects included substantial support for the student-based election monitoring group UNFREL, which fielded over 100,000 domestic monitors; and financial support for an election media monitoring project, organised by the International NGO Article XIX.

This bilateral assistance was in addition to our contribution to the European Union's 7m euros electoral assistance package. We also nominated five British election observers who formed part of the European Community's election observer team.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role the Government played in improving electoral administration in Indonesia. [89208]

Mr. Hoon: As part of the £2m bilateral electoral assistance package, referred to in my written answer to the hon. Member today (ref 89207), we provided funding for a pre-election programme of in-country workshops on cross-party lines for Indonesian political parties run by the Westminster Foundation for Democracy, with the co-operation of hon. Members. This helped to develop a code of conduct for political parties as well as address issues of transparency, policy formulation and financial integrity. We also provided financial support for voter education programmes, including some aimed specifically at reaching women and first-time voters.

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the costs to his Department of complying with the Working Time Directive in all foreign posts. [89870]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No additional financial costs have been incurred so far.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if all British embassies are applying the Working Time Directive. [89871]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: All UK-based staff in overseas posts are subject to the provisions of the Working Time Directive and Regulations. Guidance for staff and managers on their application has been circulated.

Arms Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many F680 applications for clearance to promote products for export were (i) made, (ii) approved and (iii) refused in 1998. [86205]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseeker's Allowance

17. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce changes to the Jobseeker's Allowance to allow those who lose their job because of insolvency to claim the allowance. [88042]

Angela Eagle: We are aware of the effect of the JSA rules in this area and are considering the matter in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry to see whether any changes can be made. There are, however, complex issues to be resolved. Meanwhile, there are existing safeguards to protect those most in need as payments can be made if hardship would otherwise result.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if school ancillary staff who were in term-time employment were entitled to claim Jobseeker's Allowance during the summer vacation of 1998; whether they are entitled to claim it during the summer vacation of 1999; if he will list the changes to Jobseeker's Allowance rules over the last 18 months which affect term-time employees; and if he will make a statement. [89288]

Angela Eagle: There has been no change to the Jobseeker's Allowance Regulations in the past 18 months specifically relating to term-time employees.

However, an independent Social Security Commissioner has recently decided that people who are not entitled to Jobseeker's Allowance during term-time because of the number of hours they work, are also not entitled to benefit during holiday periods. In deciding claims for Jobseeker's Allowance, adjudication officers are legally bound to follow this interpretation of the law.

School ancillary staff may claim Jobseeker's Allowance during the 1999 summer vacation. This position has not changed since 1998. Whether such claims result in entitlement to benefit will depend upon the circumstances of each individual case. Where any doubt exists about entitlement to benefit, individual school ancillary staff should claim.

State Pension (Over-80s)

18. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the state pension to those aged 80 years and above. [88043]

Mr. Timms: Our priority is to help those pensioners who are the least well off. Our minimum income guarantee for pensioners over 80, delivered through Income Support, is £82.25 for single people and £125.30 for couples. After next year's earnings uprating of the guarantee, pensioner couples over 80 will be around £8 a week better off in real terms than before the guarantee was introduced. Older pensioners will also benefit from the £100 winter fuel payment to be paid to every pensioner household before Christmas.

Lone Parents

19. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department is taking to assist lone parents to get work. [88044]

Mr. Darling: We are taking a wide range of action to help lone parents into work. These include the New Deal for Lone Parents programme which has helped over 16,500 lone parents into work and changes to the benefits rules from this October, which will allow lone parents to have a two week run-on of Income Support when they start work.

Disabled People (Pensions)

20. Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to improve the pensions of people forced to leave work through long-term disability. [88045]

Mr. Bayley: Currently, those who are in receipt of certain disability benefits can earn credits towards their basic State Retirement Pension.

The Pensions Green Paper published in December set out our proposals to extend the new State Second Pension to long-term disabled people with broken work records. They will receive flat-rate credits subject to a simple contribution test. This will represent a significant improvement in the financial position of disabled people in retirement.

Social Security Fraud

21. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve co-ordination between the Benefits Agency and Local Authorities in combating fraud. [88048]

Mr. Timms: We regard improved co-operation across Government, as well as with Local Authorities, as fundamental to our anti-fraud work. We are continuing to encourage and develop strong links between the Benefits Agency and Local Authorities. For example, we have installed 360 Random Access Terminals in 349 Local Authorities to facilitate the exchange of data between the Benefits Agency and Local Authorities. More widely, the Government are helping Departments, Local Authorities and the private sector to work more closely together to combat fraud across the range of welfare services. There is a continuing work programme to measure the size of the security problem facing welfare services, to ensure that Departments know what type of data each holds and to explore new ways of working in concert to fight fraud and uphold compliance with the law. An Inter-Ministerial Group on Welfare Fraud was announced in July 1998 to oversee this work.

Child Support Agency

22. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the performance of the Child Support Agency. [88054]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security set out our plans to reform the child support system in the White Paper published last week.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the working of the Child Support Agency. [88021]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced our plans for reform last week. These will put children's rights at the centre of child support and get money to a million children who today miss out.

Widows Benefits

23. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the proposed changes to widows benefits. [88049]

Angela Eagle: Our proposed changes will modernise the present, out-dated widows benefits scheme, which was devised over 50 years ago and has altered little despite the enormous changes in society.

We will continue to provide support to bereaved people. Our reforms will concentrate help available from the State where and when it is most needed: on immediate needs and on children and families. Importantly, our reforms will give equal treatment to married men and women; making bereavement benefits available to men for the first time.

Pension Reform

24. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his proposals for pension reform. [88050]

Mr. Timms: Our strategy for a fundamental reform of the pensions system was set out in the pensions Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" published before Christmas. It is based on the principle that everyone who can save for his or her retirement has a responsibility to do so. In turn we have a responsibility to provide security in retirement for those who cannot save enough. Our proposals are based on four interlinked pillars:

the contributory Basic State Pension, increased at least in line with prices, will remain the key building block of the pension system.

the Minimum Income Guarantee, delivered through Income Support, which will provide an income floor below which no pensioner without savings will fall, and we aim to uprate that guarantee in line with earnings as resources permit. The new Minimum Income Guarantee will form the target which we want people to beat through their pension provision and they will do that in different ways.

a new State Second Pension to replace SERPS. State Second Pension will ensure that everybody who has worked and contributed throughout their working lives will have an income on retirement above the level of the Minimum Income Guarantee. People caring for a disabled person or bringing up children aged five and under, and disabled people with broken work records, will get credits for State Second Pension.

Stakeholder Pension schemes, which will provide good value, reliable funded pensions for people for whom no suitable funded scheme is available.

We believe that for most people on moderate and higher incomes it is a funded pension that offers them the best prospects for their income in retirement and that is why we are determined to ensure that those people who today can save for their retirement have the framework in which to do so. Stakeholder Pension schemes will combine the low overheads and high security of occupational pensions with the flexibility of the best of personal pensions, and will be available to all. They will be particularly designed to help those on middle incomes, those earning roughly between £9,000 and £20,000 a year, but will benefit those on higher incomes as well. Once secure low-cost value for money Stakeholder Pension Schemes have become established, we expect the State Second Pension will no longer be earnings-related but paid at a flat rate.

Occupational pension schemes are one of the main reasons for the improvement in pensioners' incomes over the recent decades and will continue to play a vital role. We want to build on the success of traditional occupational schemes. In the "Strengthening the Occupational Pensions Framework" consultation paper that was published on the day after the pensions Green Paper we set out a number of proposals to strengthen and simplify the regulation of occupational schemes.

Our objective is to bring the UK pensions system up to date and to make sure that after a lifetime of hard work people do not arrive at retirement certain to depend on income-related benefits. We are determined to ensure that everyone has a decent income in retirement and these objectives are at the heart of the Pensions Green Paper we published in December.

Housing Benefit

26. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received from landlords on the reform of housing benefit. [88052]

Angela Eagle: I have received representations from landlords on a number of aspects of Housing Benefit. I welcome these representations. It is important that we understand the effect of Housing Benefit on landlords as well as tenants, as we consider proposals to reform the system.

Welfare Reform

27. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received on his proposals for reform of the benefits system. [88053]

Mr. Timms: We have received numerous representations on our recent proposals for reform from organisations, academic bodies, MPs and members of the public towards our central aim of work for those who can and security for those who cannot. Over 4,000 responses have been received in total to formal consultation exercises on welfare reform since March 1998.

Minimum Incomes

29. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when and how he last assessed the minimum income needed by (a) young people, (b) single people, (c) couples, (d) pensioners, (e) people with disabilities and (f) people with dependants; and how his conclusions relate to social security rates. [88056]

Angela Eagle: Benefit rates are reviewed annually. Our welfare reform programme aims to tackle the root causes of poverty, help people to earn a decent income through work and provide security for those unable to work. We have introduced improvements in benefits for pensioners through the Minimum Income Guarantee, and announced plans for a new Disability Income Guarantee. We have also increased support for families with children through the tax and benefit systems.

Disabled Children

30. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the level of support given to children with disabilities. [88057]

Mr. Bayley: The level of financial support given to a disabled child is dependent upon the circumstances of the case. There is a wide range of financial assistance available which contributes towards the extra costs faced by families of disabled children and which includes:

Disability Living Allowance which provides a contribution towards the extra costs incurred because of the effects of disability. The Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, currently before Parliament, provides that the age limit for entitlement to the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance will be lowered to the age of three, giving help to an additional 8,000 children.

Within Income Support, income based Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, groups identified as likely to have extra expenses receive help through the disability premium structure. The new Disability Income Guarantee will provide extra help in these premiums for families with disabled children getting the highest rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance.

Help is also available from the Family Fund Trust. This is funded by the UK Health Departments and has been allocated over £24 million for 1999–2000. It provides grants to low-income families with severely disabled children to enable them to continue to care for them at home.

Pensioner Support

31. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to help the poorest pensioners; and if he will outline a timetable for introducing the new measures. [88058]

Mr. Timms: We have already announced that next April the minimum income guarantee, delivered through Income Support, will rise in line with earnings, demonstrating our determination that the least well-off pensioners should share in rising national prosperity.

We are currently considering options for encouraging more pensioners to claim the Income Support they are entitled to. We are also looking at ways in which the rules on the treatment of savings can be changed to better reward those pensioners who have managed to save a modest amount for their retirement.

We will be bringing forward our plans on these measures in due course.

Maternity Costs

32. Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to assist mothers with the costs of maternity. [88059]

Mr. Bayley: We are extending Maternity Allowance to women who earn £30 a week or more and increasing it for self-employed women, who currently receive less benefit than employed women.

The existing Social Fund Maternity Payment will be replaced with a Sure Start Maternity Grant from April 2000 and doubled from £100 to £200 for each child.

These improvements will give low-earning mothers-to-be some financial help towards the costs of a new baby, enable them to take their full entitlement to maternity leave and help them achieve a better balance between work and family life.

Invalidity Benefit

33. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons had their invalidity benefit cancelled in the most recent annual period for which figures are available. [88060]

Mr. Bayley: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 839.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the proposed 1 per cent. maximum charge for stakeholder pensions is intended to cover the costs of advice. [88051]

Mr. Timms: We want to set the overall charge limit at a level which will, over time, allow stakeholder pension schemes to meet the cost of delivering a number of services, including information and basic advice, to potential members. These costs are likely to vary from scheme to scheme and it would not be sensible to specify what proportion of the charge should be used to provide each element.

We will be consulting further on the advice arrangements for stakeholder schemes, including defining what basic advice should cover. The final decision on the overall limit on charges will be made in the light of this further work.

Pensioners (Benefit Take-up)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that pensioners receive the benefits to which they are entitled. [88055]

Mr. Timms: We undertook pilot projects and research last year to understand more about why many pensioners do not claim the Income Support they are entitled to, and what could be done to improve this situation. We are currently exploring options for further activity to encourage more pensioners to claim, and we will be bringing forward our plans in due course.

Departmental Spending

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of total spending on each benefit provided by his Department and on central, regional and agency administration costs in each of the last three years. [89075]

Mr. Timms: A breakdown of total spending on each benefit provided by Department of Social Security grouped by the Departmental objectives is published in Tables 9 and 10 (pages 117 to 1720) of the Social Security Departmental Report (The Government's Expenditure Plans—1999/2000).

Note:
The Department does not allocate its running cost funding on a regional basis

Tax-benefit Model Tables

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tax-benefit model tables (1) under the system operating when the Working Families Tax Credit is introduced for a married couple with two children aged under 11, with average council tax and a mortgage of (i) £35,000, (ii) £45,000 and (iii) £55,000, where there is (a) no earner, (b) one earner on £3 per hour and (c) one earner on £3.60 per hour and where, if there is an earner, he works for (A) five hours, (B) 10 hours, (C) 15 hours, (D) 20 hours, (E) 25 hours, (F) 30 hours, (G) 35 hours, (H) 40 hours, (I) 45 hours and (J) 50 hours; [89308]

(2) if he will publish tax-benefit model tables under the existing system for a lone mother with two children aged under 11, who is an owner-occupier with a mortgage of (a) £35,000, (b) £45,000 and (c) £55,000, paying average council tax, where her earnings as (a) nil, (b) £3 per hour and (c) £3.60 per hour, where, if she is an earner, she works for (i) five hours, (ii) 10 hours, (iii) 15 hours, (iv) 20 hours, (v) 25 hours, (vi) 30 hours, (vii) 35 hours, (viii) 40 hours, (ix) 45 hours and (x) 50 hours and where, if she is an earner, she has childcare costs of (A) £20, (B) £30, (C) £40, (D) £50 and (E) £60. [89310]

(3) under the present system for a married couple with two children aged under 11, with average council tax and a mortgage of (i) £35,000, (ii) £45,000 and (iii) £55,000, where there is (a) no earner, (b) one earner on £3 per hour and (c) one earner on £3.60 per hour and where, if there is an earner, he works for (1) five hours, (2) 10 hours, (3) 15 hours, (4) 20 hours, (5) 25 hours, (6) 30 hours, (7) 35 hours, (8) 40 hours, (9) 45 hours and (10) 50 hours; [89307]

(4) under the system operating when the Working Families Tax Credit is introduced for a lone mother with two children aged under 11, who is an owner-occupier with a mortgage of (a) £35,000, (b) £45,000 and (c) £55,000, paying average council tax, where her earnings are (i) nil, (ii) £3 per hour and (iii) £3.60 per hour, and where, if she is an earner, she works for (A) five hours, (B) 10 hours, (C) 15 hours, (D) 20 hours, (E) 25 hours, (F) 30 hours, (G) 35 hours, (H) 40 hours, (I) 45 hours and (J) 50 hours and where, if she is an earner, she has childcare costs of (1) £20, (2) £30, (3) £40, (4) £50 and (5) £60. [89311]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available as the Department's Tax-Benefit Model Tables are not produced in respect of owner-occupiers who have mortgages.

Personal Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will request the Audit Commission to keep records with respect to each data matching programme undertaken or investigated which contains (a) the total number of individuals whose personal data were matched, (b) the number of matches which resulted in no further action, (c) the number of matches which required further investigation by staff, (d) the number of matches which following such investigation resulted in no further action, (e) the number of withdrawn claims or prosecutions identified by data matching, (f) the cost of the data matching programme including all direct and indirect staff costs and (h) the amounts saved by the data matching programme. [89592]

Mr. Timms: The Audit Commission's National Fraud Initiative which was carried out in 1996, 1997 and 1998 will help to provide this type of information. The Audit Commission are due to publish a report on the outcome of this work in late 1999.

Compensation

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the matters within his Department's responsibility in respect of which it has had to pay out compensation to members of the public since May 1997. [89708]

Mr. Timms: Compensation has been paid to members of the public on a number of areas since 1997. A great many of these payments stem from problems that arose before May 1997, including the NIRS2 computer system.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much compensation has been paid to people who have been underpaid benefits as a result of the NIRS2 computer breakdown. [89709]

Mr. Timms: The amount of compensation, under the normal Departmental Special Payment rules, which has been paid to people who have been underpaid benefits as a result of the NIRS2 computer problems is £12,891.13. These figures are up to the end of May 1999. Further compensation has been made to customers who suffered inconvenience as a result of NIRS2 delays. However, not all of these people have been underpaid benefit.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89689]

Mr. Timms: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security of those households below half average income whose main source of income is welfare benefits, what proportion have income from earnings; and what is the (a) mean and (b) median amount of those earnings. [89529]

Angela Eagle: Eight per cent. of households with below half average income whose main source of income is benefits have income from earnings. This proportion is the same both Before Housing Costs (BHC) and After Housing Costs (AHC).

Both BHC and AHC, the mean of those earnings (for those households below half average income whose main source of income is benefits) is £55 per week and the median £52 per week (BHC) and £51 per week (AHC).

Notes:

1. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set which is based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland. 1996–97 is the latest year for which information is available.

2. For the purposes of this analysis, benefits are deemed to be the 'main source of income' where they form more than 50 per cent. of a household's total gross income.

3. The income measure used to determine whether or not a household is below half of the national average is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say income that is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household). It is standard HBAI practice to give results for income both before and after housing costs, in order to allow for the effect of variations in housing costs between households.

4. Monetary values are given in April 1998 prices and refer to gross weekly household earnings.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of households below half average income have any earnings; and what the (a) median and (b) mean amount of their earnings is. [89530]

Angela Eagle: Twenty six per cent. of households with below half average income have income from earnings. This proportion is the same both Before Housing Costs (BHC) and After Housing Costs (AHC). The median of those earnings is £125 per week BHC (for those below half average income) and £138 per week (AHC). The mean of those earnings is £145 per week (BHC) and £160 per week (AHC).

Notes:

1. All figures are estimates and are taken from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data set which is based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS). The FRS does not include Northern Ireland. 1996–97 is the latest year for which information is available.

2. The income measure used to determine whether or not a household is below half of the national average is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income (that is to say income that is adjusted to reflect the composition of the household). It is standard HBAI practice to give results for income both before and after housing costs, in order to allow for the effect of variations in housing costs between households.

Single Gateway

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the administrative cost of the Single Gateway to benefits. [88030]

Angela Eagle: An additional £79.5 million has been allocated from the Invest to Save Budget to fund the ONE service (formerly Single Gateway) in the 12 Pilot areas.

The extra allocation is on top of the amount that would be required to administer benefits in the pilot areas under current arrangements. It also covers one-off start-up costs (for example, estates and training costs), and Information Technology and capital expenditure over the period of the pilots.

Pensions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the potential liability for compensation incurred by his Department from advice from (a) Benefits Agency offices to widows on changes to their SERPS entitlement and (b) the new hotline to advise people on Stakeholder pensions and other pension schemes. [89707]

Mr. Timms: Existing widows are not affected by the change in inherited SERPS. We are aware of concern about the information given in response to inquiries about the change that is due to take place from April 2000. We are considering how best to resolve this matter and will make an announcement in due course.

The "Pensions Power for You" helpline is being organised by the TUC and this Department as a partnership initiative with the CBI, the Financial Services Agency and other supporting organisations and companies to provide general pensions information. Call handlers will not provide individual financial advice.

Disabled People

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his Department is doing to help disabled people obtain jobs. [88025]

Mr. Bayley: We have a comprehensive strategy for helping people with disabilities who want to work. We are providing active help and encouragement for people to move towards work; we are addressing barriers to work in the benefit system; we are taking steps to make work pay; and we are promoting radical change in the workplace to ensure equality and opportunity.

PRIME MINISTER

Serbia (Reconstruction)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Prime Minister what measures he will take to prevent Governments providing Serbia with funds to repair bridges whilst President Milosevic remains in power. [88084]

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to provide reconstruction assistance as long as Milosevic remains in power; we do of course support the UNHCR programmes and others which offer humanitarian aid to the Serbian people. We believe that this approach is widely shared by our partners and allies. We are discouraging other countries from providing reconstruction assistance, but there are no legal means to stop them.

Danube (Destroyed Bridges)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact of the destruction of bridges on the Danube in Serbia upon the economies of (i) Germany, (ii) Turkey, (iii) Austria, (iv) Romania and (v) Bulgaria. [88083]

The Prime Minister: All countries to which the hon. Member refers participated in, or gave wholehearted support to, the NATO action in the Balkans.

We are in close touch with all the countries of the region and with the international financial institutions, who are carrying out assessments of the reconstruction needs. We have already contributed to packages of support for those most directly affected, and will continue to do so.

EU Anti-fraud Office

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what amendments he supported to proposals for the formation of the EU Anti-Fraud Office; and if he will make a statement. [88466]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom supported amendments which would serve to deliver a strong, effective, independent anti-fraud office with wide ranging powers and rights matched by responsibility and accountability including reporting to the European Parliament and the Council, in line with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's initiative at the January ECOFIN Council. Details of the original and amended proposals and the final Regulation which was supported by the Government are set out in explanatory memoranda dated 15 January 1999, 5 May 1999 and 10 June 1999.

Kosovo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 766, what the status is of the undertaking given by the KLA on demilitarisation; and what are the consequences of such demilitarisation for an unaccompanied tour obligation for British armed forces and their families. [88872]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The undertaking of 21 June 1999 commits the KLA to a cease-fire and to a process of disengagement from the zones of conflict, subsequent demilitarisation and reintegration into civil society. The Commander of KFOR, Lieutenant General Sir Mike Jackson, is the final authority regarding interpretation.

We will reduce our contribution to KFOR as soon as circumstances permit.

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister who chairs meetings of the JCCC in his absence. [89282]

The Prime Minister: Such an occasion has not arisen.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list those hon. Members from the Liberal Democratic Party who have attended meetings of the JCCC; [89305]

(2) how many meetings of the JCCC there have been since its inception. [89303]

The Prime Minister: Like all Cabinet Committees, details of the proceedings of the Joint Consultative Committee are exempt from disclosure under the internal discussion and advice exemption of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if it is his policy that the JCCC should continue indefinitely. [89304]

The Prime Minister: The Joint Consultative Committee exists to consider policy issues of joint interest to the Government and the Liberal Democratic Party. I would expect it to remain in existence while it continues to fulfil this remit satisfactorily.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what considerations led him to conclude that the subjects for discussion within the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee should be exempt from the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. [89837]

The Prime Minister: Paragraph 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information states that information is exempt from the commitments under the Code if its disclosure would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if the 30 year rule applies to the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee; and if he will make a statement. [89838]

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will lift the exemption from disclosure under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information of proceedings in the Joint Consultative Committee. [89815]

The Prime Minister: No.

Inward Investment

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister how many meetings (a) he has and (b) his staff have had with representatives of the American Government at which opportunities for inward investment by American companies in the British retail sector were discussed. [89338]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 July 1999]: I, Ministers, advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of our work. This properly includes meetings with representatives from foreign governments. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available.

It is the job of the British Prime Minister to promote this country as a place to invest, boosting British jobs and prosperity. I have done this on many occasions and will continue to do so.

EU Rights Charter

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if the EU Charter of Rights will include rights not presently accorded to citizens under EU law. [89813]

The Prime Minister: It is too early to say what the final Charter will contain; the draft will be submitted to the European Council during the French Presidency in the second half of 2000. Most member states (including the UK) favour a document which sets out in a more accessible form the many rights which citizens already enjoy at European level.

European Commissioners

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions the acting European Commissioners have represented the Commission (a) at Council of Ministers meetings, (b) at other internal Committee meetings, (c) at public events and (d) at international meetings, following the no-confidence motion at the European Parliament. [89828]

The Prime Minister: The Commission resigned following the publication of the Committee of Independent Experts' Report into its activities. It was not dismissed and no motion of no-confidence was passed by the European Parliament. In accordance with the Treaty, Commissioners have since carried out their responsibilities in a caretaker capacity pending the appointment of a new College. We expect this to take place in September.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance he gives Ministers about letting hon. Members know in advance when they visit an hon. Member's constituency in a ministerial capacity. [89396]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 July 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 604.

Yugoslavia (Civilian Deaths)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what is his present estimate of (a) military and (b) civilian deaths resulting from NATO air activity over Yugoslavia. [89736]

The Prime Minister: Our most recent assessment is that up to 5,000 members of the Serbian forces may have been injured or killed during the recent military action. We have no estimate of the number of civilian casualties and I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 20 May 1999, Official Report, column 403.

Turkey (Arms Exports)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the export of arms to Turkey. [89836]

The Prime Minister: The criteria to be used in considering licence application for the export of conventional arms was announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to the House on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–30. The criteria and the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Sales, agreed during the UK Presidency of the EU in 1998, provide clear guidance. The Government's policy is clear: they will not issue an export licence if there is a clearly identifiable risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression or international aggression. All applications for exports to Turkey are considered on a case-by-case basis according to the criteria.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to answer parliamentary question 81450, a holding answer for which was given on 20 April. [89742]

The Prime Minister: I did so on 21 April.

Telecommunications Masts (Chilterns)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister what representations have been made on his behalf to Wycombe District Council about planning applications to erect telecommunication masts in the Chilterns area of outstanding natural beauty. [89868]

The Prime Minister: None.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if in relation to the Monsanto field trials of genetically modified sugar beet approved to take place in Ruddington, Nottingham, he will set out details of (a) the pre-planting environmental audit of the area surrounding the field test site, (b) the sub-soil analysis of the field test site prior to planting, (c) the terms and timing set for impact assessments and (d) who will be responsible for the monitoring; (e) what steps he will take to ensure that the monitoring is independent of corporate genetically modified crops interests. [81075]

Mr. Meacher: (a) The pre-planning environmental audit of the area surrounding the field test site included details of the release site ecosystem including climate and fauna, details of any sexually compatible wild relatives or cultivated plant species present and the proximity of officially recognised biotopes or protected areas.

(b) Adverse effects on soil micro-organisms arising from the expression of the transgenes introduced into the genetically modified sugar beet were not identified as a potential hazard in the risk assessment. This is because the gene products are not associated with any known toxicology effects on micro-organisms and are of microbial origin. As the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) accepted this assessment, the release consent did not require a sub-soil analysis of the field test site to be undertaken prior to planting.

(c) The terms and timing set for impact assessment are set out in the terms and conditions of the consent. All consent holders must notify the Secretary of State of the effects of the release for assessment of any risks to the environment. In this particular consent, the consent holder is also required to submit a report to the Secretary of State on the outcome of the release one month after the termination of the trial. For two years following the trial the consent holder must ensure effective control of volunteer GM sugar beet.

(d) The consent holder is responsible for monitoring the outcome of the release. The programme of inspections by the Health and Safety Executive ensures that the terms and conditions of the consent, including any monitoring requirements, are adhered to.

(e) Independent monitoring of the results will be undertaken by ACRE.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the implications for British beekeepers wishing to produce honey free of genetically modified material of the commercial growing of genetically modified oilseed rape. [81395]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 April 1999]: In evaluating a risk assessment for the release of a genetically modified (GM) plant, the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment will always take into account the consequences of bees visiting the flowers of the GM plant. The Advisory Committee for Novel Foods and Processes have considered the food safety issues relating to the presence in honey of pollen from GM plants.

If in the future we move to the widespread cultivation of GM crops in the UK, it may not be possible in those areas with intensive arable farming to guarantee that honey will be entirely free of genetically modified material. I am aware that the European Commission is currently considering guidelines for those wishing to make claims that foods are free from GM materials.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the farm-scale sites for genetically modified sugar or fodder beet, indicating the (i) location, (ii) area grown and (iii) consent holder and number. [85943]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 June 1999]: SCIMAC (Supply Chain Initiative on Modified Agricultural Crops) are carrying out a farmscale evaluation of genetically modified (GM) sugar beet with ecological monitoring at Manor Farm, East Bradenham, Norfolk. The total area of the trial is two hectares. The consent holder is Monsanto Life Sciences and the consent number is 98/R22/12. Further information on the trial and the environmental risk assessment are available on the statutory public register held by my Department.

The Government are not directly involved with this trial. GM sugar and fodder beet are not included in the joint Government/SCIMAC farm-scale evaluations which I announced to the House of Lords Select Committee on 21 October 1998.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions where the seed used for and to be used for this year's farm-scale trials of genetically modified oilseed and maize were grown; and where the seeds to be used for next year's trials will be grown. [85948]

Mr. Meacher: The seed being used this year in the farm-scale evaluations of genetically modified maize and spring oil seed rape has been imported from outside of the European Community by AgrEvo UK Ltd.

The particular varieties of seeds to be used in the evaluations of winter oil seed rape, starting later this year, and for the evaluations planned for next year, have not yet been decided. Consequently the source of the seed is not yet known.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations were undertaken with neighbouring farmers about the location of genetically modified crop farm-scale trials. [85950]

Mr. Meacher: All crops in the farm-scale evaluations are being grown in accordance with the SCIMAC (Supply Chain Initiative on Modified Agricultural Crops) guidelines. The code sets out requirements for separation distances between genetically modified (GM) crops and conventional and organic crops. Neighbouring farmers must be contacted if these separation distances cannot be maintained within the boundaries of the farm.

The farm-scale evaluations of genetically modified spring oil seed rape were planted under a consent issued under Part B of Directive 90/220/EEC. This required consent holders to place an advertisement in a local paper, giving information about the release including the exact location of the field, prior to planting. The farm-scale evaluations of genetically modified maize were planted under a consent issued under Part C of Directive 90/220/EEC. This does not require consent holders to make any public notification prior to planting.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the crops grown in genetically modified crop trials which have so far entered the food chain by (a) type, (b) volume and (c) date. [75111]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 March 1999]: Material from genetically modified (GM) crop trials cannot enter the food or feed chain without specific approval. No material has been used as food. Of the 154 consents for GM crop trials issued one, in respect of a GM maize, has approval to be used as animal feed. Consent was issued in April 1996. It is not known whether the crop was used in this way but, if it was, the yield from the site would be less than one tonne. Two further consents. in respect of GM oil seed rape given consent in August 1994 and March 1997, have approval for the meal from the trial crop to be used as feed. Again, it is not known whether the crop was used in this way but, if it was, the maximum yield would be in the region of 4 tonnes.

Air Bags

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate his Department has made of the number of people (a) killed, (b) injured and (c) whose lives have been saved, by air bags in vehicles in the most recent year for which figures are available. [86300]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Statistics collected for Great Britain do not yield this information. However, international research indicates that air bags provide an overall safety benefit for drivers.

BMW Advertisement

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has made to BMW about its national newspaper advertisements on 10 June which refer to the enjoyment of cornering on country lanes at high speed; if he will publish its response; and if he will discourage such advertisements. [87633]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department registers complaints to the Advertising Standards Authority against press advertisements which contravene the British Codes of Advertising and Sales Promotion in relation to road safety. The advertisement for BMW to which the hon. Member refers is one in a series placed over three pages. The three advertisements include many road safety messages taken from "The Advanced Driver's Manual" published by the motoring organisation the Institute of Advanced Motorists. The Department does not consider this advertisement contravenes the advertising guidelines and supports advertising campaigns which encourage drivers to take responsibility for their driving and to learn advanced driving skills.

Public Service Agreements (Environmental Objectives)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which non-departmental public bodies do not have aims or objectives under the public service agreements, related to environmental protection or environmentally sustainable development; and if he will list them. [88909]

Mr. Meale: The Green Ministers Committee has reviewed how departments and their associated bodies (including non-departmental public bodies) take account of sustainable development in their aims and objectives. The first annual report of the Green Ministers Committee is due to be published in July 1999 and will set out the findings of this review. As part of this review non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department have been advised of the Government's policy on sustainable development, including the environmental protection aspects of the policy. They have been encouraged to include their plans for sustainable development in their corporate plans and work is in hand to discuss with them their scope for contributing further to the policy. Many of the Department's non-departmental public bodies do contain environmental matters as part of their aims and objectives and we are considering whether all our non-departmental public bodies should have an environmental policy on which they should report.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Government Departments do not have aims or objectives, under the public service agreements, relating to environmental protection or environmentally sustainable development. [88908]

Mr. Meale: Each Department's Public Service Agreement was set out in the document "Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability" which was presented to Parliament by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in December 1998. The Green Ministers Committee has since then reviewed the aims and objectives of Departments in terms of how sustainable development and the environment are addressed. We will set out our findings and the background in the first annual report of the Green Ministers Committee which is due to be published in July 1999.

London Transport (Consultants)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what has been the amount spent on consultants in relation to London Transport matters in each of the last eight years; and how much is currently (a) committed and (b) estimated to be spent; [89012]

(2) if he will make a statement on the principal reasons for the use of consultants in relation to London Transport matters (a) in each of the last three years and (b) currently. [89013]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested. The Government use external consultants when they require expert independent advice. Over the last eight years consultants have been employed to advise on, among other issues, the Jubilee Line Extension, Crossrail and the privatisation of London Transport's bus operating companies. Consultants that are currently employed by the Department to advise on London Transport are Ove Arup, acting as the Secretary of State's Agent on the Jubilee Line Extension project, and Gibb Ltd. to advise on integrating the national rail network with the Underground. In 1998–99 the Department spent £693,000 on consultancy work relating to London Transport and in 1999–2000 the amount spent by 1 July was £294,000.

Leyton Yard

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) negotiations and (b) consultations took place prior to his Department selling the site of Leyton Yard to Asda; which other potential purchasers expressed an interest and how the sale decision was determined; what amount was agreed; how much of the proceeds will be paid to Government and how much to other parties; what conditions were attached to the sale agreement; and if he will make a statement. [89017]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) Development Agreement, London & Continental Railways (LCR) is permitted to dispose of land, transferred to them under that Agreement, which the Secretary of State determines to be surplus to the needs of the CTRL Project. Leyton Yard is such a site. The sale of the Leyton Yard site, as with other sites which may be declared surplus, is subject to a clawback which returns half the proceeds to the taxpayer, allowing for the costs of site development and sale. London & Continental Railways' share of the sale proceeds has to be used to fund the CTRL project. The disposal price of Leyton Yard was arrived at through an open bidding process. I understand from LCR that, in addition to Asda, negotiations were held with other major supermarket chains. The final size of the clawback payment cannot yet be calculated as the development is still at an early stage. The non-cash terms of the agreement are a matter for LCR, but the agreement also delivers significant planning gains to the London Borough of Waltham Forest, and helps to facilitate and finance important local highway improvements.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the figures for each of the financial years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 in respect of the operations of London Underground Ltd. for (a) total sales revenue from (i) fares, (ii) elderly and disabled concessions and (iii) other sources, (b) staff costs, including pensions, (c) energy, including power distribution, (d) train movement and maintenance, (e) track and signalling maintenance, (f) stations and escalators and (g) other revenue costs including administration, excluding costs arising from the extensions to, and adaptation of, the Jubilee Line. [89015]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following table shows London Underground Revenue and Operating Costs from 1995–96 through to 1997–98:

London Underground revenue and operating costs 1995–98

£ million

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Revenue
Ordinary Fares	746	779	878
Elderly and disabled concessionary	18	17	20
Other fare income	1	1	1
Non-fare income	51	57	62
Total	816	854	961
Operating Costs
Employee costs	356	376	363
Energy	28	29	27
Maintenance	58	57	58
Other costs	182	182	248
Total	624	644	696
Gross Margin	192	210	265

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the decision of London Underground Ltd. to dispense with its own means of electricity generation in London; and if he will make a statement. [89010]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I imagine my hon. Friend is referring to the Power PFI deal with London Underground signed last August with the private sector Powerlink consortium. The deal involves the modernisation of the Underground's power generation and distribution network and all assets will return to the public sector at the end of this 30 year PFI contract.

I met my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound) and union representatives on 22 December 1997 to discuss a number of issues arising out of London Transport's PFI deals, including Power. Ministers have also received a total of 10 letters concerning the project from hon. Members and trade unions representatives.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had concerning plans to avoid disruptions to travellers during the scheduled closure of the London Underground Northern Line City Branch this summer. [89136]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I meet with the managing directors of London Underground (LU) and London Transport Buses (LTB) on a regular, monthly basis to discuss issues such as any line closures and measures to minimise the resulting passenger disruption. Officials from the Government Office for London have also been involved in regular meetings with LU, LTB, the London Boroughs and the Police to discuss replacement services during the Northern Line City Branch closure.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport and I met the managing director of LU on 23 June to discuss both the Circle and Northern Line City Branch closures. He assured us that LU are making every effort to keep passenger disruption as low as possible. During the Northern Line City Branch closure, extra buses will be provided along the route and LU will also increase the number of trains along the Charing Cross Branch. Alternative routes are being advertised and extra station staff will help to keep passengers informed.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had concerning efforts to end disruptions for travellers on the Circle and District London Underground lines arising from current closure of parts of the line. [89137]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport and I met the managing director of London Underground (LU) on 23 June to discuss both the Circle and Northern Line City Branch closures. He assured us that the timetable LU are now operating around the Circle Line is robust and that it is providing passengers with a better service than they received in the first week after Circle Line engineering works began on 12 June. He also promised to provide us with a full report on what went wrong and to inform us immediately if the service around the Circle Line should deteriorate again.

In addition, I meet with the managing directors of LU and London Transport Buses on a regular, monthly basis to discuss issues such as any line closures. My officials have also discussed with LT the measures they are taking to minimise disruption around the Circle Line.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress made with the construction of the Jubilee Line Extension; and when the section between Green Park and North Greenwich is due to be fully operational. [89134]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Phase 1 of the Jubilee Line Extension opened on 14 May. London Transport plan to open phase 2 (on to Waterloo) in late summer, and phase 3 (linking with the existing line and providing an end-to-end Stratford to Stanmore service) by late autumn.

Somerset Levels

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assistance he is providing to the Environment Agency to further the promotion of eco-tourism on the Somerset Levels. [89019]

Mr. Meale: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions provides the Agency with grant in aid each year to enable it to carry out its statutory duties. One of its duties is to promote the conservation and enhancement of water and associated land for recreational purposes. In addition the Agency is a lead organisation for flood defence and water level management, both of which contribute to the distinctive landscape of the area.

The Agency is just one of many organisations that has a role in maintaining, managing and developing the internationally important Somerset Levels wetland area. An organisation known as the Levels and Moors Partnership (LAMP) was set up some years ago to bring all the partnership organisations together to address such issues as the socio-economic development of the Levels. This work has included the development of a sustainable tourism strategy which recognises the economic needs of the local people and the needs of visitors, while providing effective protection to the environment.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in National Insurance Contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88857]

Mr. Meale: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will depend on the rates of the climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is, therefore, not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Renovated Empty Properties

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the percentage of properties undergoing major repairs and renovation that have been empty for over 12 months. [88839]

Mr. Raynsford: Out of an estimated 11,200 vacant local authority-owned dwellings in England awaiting or undergoing major repairs on 1 April 1998, almost one third (31 per cent.) had been empty for more than a year. Equivalent information for Registered Social Landlord vacant stock indicates that of approximately 9,000 such dwellings, just over a quarter (27 per cent.) had been vacant for over one year.

Comparable information about other residential stock in the public and private sectors is not available centrally.

Tunstall Floral Hall

Ms Wailey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will visit Tunstall Floral Hall, Stoke-on-Trent. [88810]

Mr. Prescott: I have at present no plans to do so.

London Taxis (Millennium)

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will alter the rate of the charge tariff for licensed London taxis for the period of the millennium public holiday. [89068]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I shall make a decision later in the year on whether any supplement, above that which would normally apply at the New Year, is justified for the millennium public holiday, and if so, what it should be.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the proposed Food Standards Agency will have powers to publish the details of all regular health and safety inspections of restaurants under the proposals for freedom of information. [89132]

Mr. Meale: The proposed Food Standards Agency remit is to look after food hygiene. Health and safety inspection of restaurants and similar premises is carried out by local authorities under the general direction and guidance of the Health and Safety Commission. Each local authority will be directly responsible under the Bill for the disclosure of the information it holds.

"Sustainable Energy from Waste"

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation took place with his Department on the contents of "Sustainable Energy from Waste", published by the Department for Trade and Industry; what representations he made; and if he will make a statement. [89116]

Mr. Meale: The pamphlet is itself publicity for the Government's complementary strategies on waste, "A Way With Waste: a draft waste strategy for England and Wales", and renewable energy "New and Renewable Energy: prospects for the 21st century".

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to publicise the Government's pamphlet, "Sustainable Energy from Waste"; and if he will make a statement. [89117]

Mr. Meale: Officials in both Departments work together closely on the full range of waste and renewable energy issues. This document was prepared by consultants in line with agreed policy.

Rural Housing

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue guidelines to the Environment Agency on its responsibilities in relation to housing in rural areas. [89156]

Mr. Meale: The Environment Agency has no direct responsibilities for housing in rural areas. The Department has no plans to issue rural housing policy guidance to the Agency.

Our White Paper for Rural England will, however, explore how a wide range of policies will support sustainable rural communities in the future.

Environment Agency (Estate)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many houses the Environment Agency owned in each parliamentary constituency in the South West in each of the last five years. [89154]

Mr. Meale: Since 1994 the Environment Agency has owned houses in the following constituencies in the South West region:

Cotswold: 2 houses

New Forest: 1 house

North Dorset: 1 house

Salisbury: 2 houses (one sold in 1996)

West Dorset: 2 houses

Somerton and Frome: 2 houses (one also sold in 1994)

Taunton: 3 houses (one being sold by auction in July 1999)

Tewkesbury: 2 houses

Torridge and West Devon: 2 houses (one sold in 1996 and the other sold by auction on 30 June 1999)

Truro: 1 house bought in 1998 and demolished for a flood defence scheme.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the disposal of Environment Agency properties; and what matters he will take into consideration in respect of such disposals in rural and environmentally sensitive areas. [89155]

Mr. Meale: Disposal of property is an operational matter for the Agency to determine in accordance with the Financial Memorandum issued to it by the Department.

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89163]

Mr. Meale: The total number of Statutory Instruments (SIs) registered as General Instruments in 1998, 1992, 1985 and 1973 is listed in the table. Of the SIs so registered in 1998, 306 were made by my Department, of which 9.9 per cent. were made (either wholly or as to part) to comply with Community obligations. As a result of machinery of government changes, it is impracticable, without incurring disproportionate cost, to determine how many of the SIs made in 1992, 1985 and 1973 by the predecessor departments of my Department were introduced to comply with Community obligations.

Year	Number of SIs
1998	1,565
1992	1,692
1985	1,204
1973	1,260

Source:
Statutory Publications Unit of HMSO: an SI is classified as a General Instrument if it is in the nature of a Public General Act. SIs may otherwise be registered as Local Instruments if they are in the nature of local or private Acts. SIs implementing EC/EU legislation will always be classified as General Instruments.

Birth Certificates

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those purposes for which his Department and its executive agencies require a birth certificate to be furnished by (a) employees, contractors or those applying for employment or contracts, and (b) other persons. [89152]

Mr. Meale: The sight of a birth certificate is requested in the following circumstances within DETR(C) and its executive agencies:

to enable checks on identity and nationality to be carried out on people applying for jobs in the Department; to establish the identity of relatives of departmental staff in circumstances relating to the payment of pensions.

Where contractors or consultants are directly employed by the Department, it may be necessary in certain circumstances to see certificates for security clearance purposes and where contractors supply individuals to the Department, for example building security guards or temporary staff, the contracts may include the need for basic checks to be carried out which could involve the contractor seeing a birth certificate.

The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency requires applicants for photocard driving licences to provide evidence of identity. One of the documents that is acceptable is an original birth certificate.

Arts Grants (London)

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what level of local authority grant aid has been paid by the London boroughs of (a) Wandsworth, (b) Hammersmith and Fulham and (c) Bromley to arts and theatre organisations in each of these boroughs for (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998; and if he will make a statement. [89466]

Mr. Meale: This information is not centrally available.

Sellafield

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his departmental news release number 544, of 11 June, what is the reason for the delay in the posting of the Sellafield MOX plant consultation documents on his Department's web site; and if he will extend the consultation period to compensate for the shortened notice given. [89314]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 1 July 1999]: On 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 399–400, my right hon. Friends the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced the go-ahead for uranium commissioning and a further round of consultation into the economic case for the Mixed Oxide (MOX) fuel fabrication plant at Sellafield. On the day of the announcement, copies of the consultation documents were sent to:

organisations previously consulted by the Environment Agency as part of their consideration of the MOX plant; organisations and individuals who made representations in response to either of the two consultations held by the Environment Agency; and organisations and individuals who made representations to my Department.

The publishing of consultation papers is an important part of my Department's communication strategy. Although it is our policy to publish consultation papers on the web site, this is not the primary method of consultation. It is there to complement our more established means of publication and notification. Therefore, I do not see any case for extending the consultation period. The documents were available on the web site on 25 June, as soon as the necessary preparations could be completed.

Diesel Duty

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate the Government made, prior to its announcement, of the effect of the increase in diesel fuel duty announced in the Budget statement on employment in the road haulage industry; and what estimate he has made of levels of employment in the industry over the next six months; [89650]

(2) what is his estimate of the number of jobs lost in the British road haulage industry since the recent increase in the diesel fuel duty. [89649]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government closely monitor the level of employment in the road haulage industry through the Labour Force Survey and the Annual Employers Survey. The statistics for the spring quarter of 1999 will not be ready for release until 14 July. However, the figures for goods vehicles drivers do not show a significant change between end-1997 and end-1998.

Aircraft (Low Fuel)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Civil Aviation Authority concerning low fuel state occurrences involving foreign airlines; and if he will make a statement. [89519]

Ms Glenda Jackson: DETR and Civil Aviation Authority officials discussed the allegations concerning an aircraft of Malaysia Airlines (MAS) in detail with representatives of the airline. MAS has co-operated fully in reviewing their fuel policy and examining why, on a very few occasions, low fuel levels may have been recorded at the completion of a flight. MAS offered to provide weekly reports of fuel levels for all its aircraft on arrival in the UK and this has been incorporated into their conditions for operating into this country.

Under the Chicago Convention, responsibility for regulating an airline, including compliance with minimum fuel regulations, lies with the country in which the airline is based.

Archaeological Services

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from (a) The British Archaeological Trust and (b) the Association of Local Government Archaeology Officers regarding the effect of the local government settlement for 1999–2000 on archaeological services. [89402]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 2 July 1999]: We have received no direct representations from these organisations on the settlement approved by this House on 4 February 1999, Official Report, columns 1138–86. I am, however, aware of their concerns, through the Early Day Motion number 377 laid in the House on 2 March and correspondence from the hon. Member.

OSPAR Convention

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and the outcome of the

OSPAR Convention meeting in Hull on 21 to 25 June; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the submissions made by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other OSPAR contracting parties and recognised observer organisations relevant to the United Kingdom. [89732]

Mr. Meale: The annual meeting of the OSPAR Commission, held in Hull at the invitation of the UK Government from 21 to 24 June, was opened by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. The main outcomes were the adoption of a strategy on environmental goals and management mechanisms for offshore activities (which, with the four strategies adopted at the Ministerial meeting in Portugal last year, means that all the main activities of the OSPAR Commission are now covered by long-term strategies), of a recommendation on the best available techniques for the manufacture of emulsion-PVC, and (with a reservation from Norway) of guidelines on artificial reefs in relation to marine living resources.

Other matters discussed mainly concerned the implementation of the long-term strategies adopted last year. On the strategy for radioactive substances, the Contracting Parties agreed to intensify their efforts to implement it by focusing on the principal sources of discharges, emissions and losses, including the reprocessing of nuclear fuel and some other nuclear and non-nuclear activities; where action by the operators of nuclear installations is required, the Contracting Parties agreed to ensure that this is taken without delay. Another major theme was the improvement of the structure of the OSPAR Commission and of its working practices, in order to help the implementation of the strategies.

The UK delegation presented no formal papers to the meeting. The papers which the OSPAR Commission has agreed to make public can be found on its web-site: www.ospar.org.

Raptors

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding the harmful effect on the racing pigeon population of raptors. [89658]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 2 July 1999]: My Department has received a number of representations concerning the effect of raptors on racing pigeons. This issue is being considered by the Raptor Working Group co-chaired by my Department and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. The working group is due to make its final report before the end of the year. To assist the working group in drawing its conclusions my Department let a research contract to assess the impact of raptor predation on pigeons and to investigate the effectiveness of non-lethal deterrents. It is hoped that the findings of this research will help to provide some guide to pigeon fanciers as to how they may best reduce any losses they may be incurring.

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will use his powers under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to control raptors. [89417]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 2 July 1999]: Raptors are protected by Section 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This reflects obligations under the EC Wild Birds Directive 79/409/EEC to protect all naturally occurring species of birds. The control raptors can only be licensed for the reasons set out in Section 16 of the 1981 Act, provided that there is no other satisfactory solution.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to answer parliamentary question 81262, a holding answer for which was given on 19 April. [89741]

Mr. Meacher: A full answer was given to the hon. Member on 27 April 1999, Official Report, columns 88–89.

Greater London Authority Elections

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made with the possibility of using electronic equipment in the Greater London Authority elections. [90057]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government have been considering the potential for introducing more innovative and up to date electoral procedures. Electronic voting is one of the areas the Howarth Working Party recommended for further consideration and piloting. The Working Party expects to submit a summary of its recommendations to Government later this month and its detailed report at the end of the summer. The London Mayor and Assembly elections on 4 May 2000 provide an excellent opportunity to introduce a more up to date system of voting or counting, more in keeping with our modern way of life.

Following the invitation for expressions of interest from potential suppliers, issued in March, we received a number of suggestions as to how we might make best use of some form of electronic voting equipment for the London elections next year. We have shortlisted four potential suppliers, all of which have experience in elections worldwide where electronic equipment has been used successfully and offer either touch-screen voting at polling stations or optical scanning equipment to speed the counting process. The four suppliers are Data and Research Services Plc; Election Systems and Software Inc with Unisys Ltd.; Nedap; and Smurfit Ltd.

The next stage is to carefully consider the detailed proposals for London's elections which the four shortlisted suppliers have been invited to submit. Our top priority is to run a successful election on 4 May 2000—less than a year away. We need to be sure that the use of electronic equipment will be cost effective, help rather than confuse voters, and lead to a more efficient delivery of results. The Greater London Authority will be a new modern form of governance and we need to consider voting systems to match as we move into the 21st century.

EU Directives (Water Standards)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the costs to the water industry of complying with EU directives on environmental and water quality standards for the period 2000 to 2005. [89445]

Mr. Meale: The Government announced on 1 March decisions on environmental and water quality improvement programmes which should be included in water company business plans for 2000–05. These programmes were largely comprised of investment required to meet the requirements of EC Directives, although they also included, in a fully integrated manner, significant programmes to improve compliance with domestic quality objectives.

We consider that these proposals can be delivered for around £8 billion. Companies' draft strategic business plans are now being considered by the Director General of Water Services, who will reach a provisional view later this month on the costs of these obligations for the purposes of the Periodic Review of water company price limits between 2000 and 2005.

Water Charges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress the Government have made in producing guidelines for water companies on alternative payment arrangements to water metering. [89205]

Mr. Meale: We are considering with water companies and other groups with an interest in water charging how any alternative to the present system of unmeasured charging, such as the use of Council Tax bands, could be designed to provide for fair charges and to avoid significant losses for some groups.

There is no statutory bar on water companies introducing alternative unmeasured charging systems. Under the Water Industry Act 1999, companies will be obliged to include in charges schemes details of the basis on which they wish to charge for water and sewerage services to homes. Schemes will be subject to approval by the Director General of Water Services. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will issue guidance to the Director General on the approval of schemes. We shall be consulting on draft guidance shortly.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to review water rates, with particular reference to help for pensioners. [89206]

Mr. Meale: The Director General of Water Services' periodic review of prices for the period 2000–05 may be expected to offer reductions in average water and sewerage bills in April 2000.

The Water Industry Act 1999 will, for the first time, require water companies to give householders a measure of choice in the method by which they are charged for water. Many pensioners, if they make comparatively small demands on the water system, will be able to benefit from the new statutory right to be charged on a measured basis free of initial cost. We propose to make regulations under the Act to provide protection for households who are particularly vulnerable to high measured charges because of unavoidable high water use, such as those with certain medical conditions.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure long-term reductions in water charges to domestic consumers. [89701]

Mr. Meale: Under the Water Industry Act 1991 the regulation of water and sewerage undertakers' price limits is for the Director General of Water Services. Changes in average charges for water and sewerage services must remain within limits set by the Director General for each company for each year. The Director General is currently conducting his periodic review of prices for the period 2000 to 2005. The Government have given guidance to the Director General on the environmental and water quality improvements to be delivered by 2005. We believe that these can be secured while offering reductions in average water and sewerage bills. The Director General expects to announce draft price limits for each undertaker later this month.

Energy Efficiency (Pensioner Households)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures his Department has taken to reduce the level of energy inefficiency in pensioner households. [89440]

Mr. Meale: The Government have developed a wide range of measures to improve domestic energy efficiency.

The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) is currently the main programme for insulating the homes of the neediest householders. The Scheme provides grants (up to a maximum of £315) for energy efficiency improvements in the homes of people on benefits, the disabled and the over-60s. Those aged 60 or over but not on a qualifying benefit are entitled to a 25 per cent. grant.

On 11 May I launched our consultation proposals for revising and expanding HEES. With a budget of some £300 million for the first two years, New HEES will provide comprehensive packages of heating and insulation improvements. The programme will provide substantial help for over-60s on low income, including central heating systems, with a revised grant maximum of £1,800.

The Government have also increased the annual Winter Fuel Payment to £100 for every eligible pensioner household. Pensioners can put this money towards the cost of their fuel bills, or to help fund energy efficiency improvements.

In addition to a broad range of Government energy efficiency programmes, the Director General for Electricity has, since 1994, set Energy Efficiency Standards of Performance requiring the public energy suppliers to encourage and assist customers with energy efficiency measures. Around two thirds of this help has gone to pensioner and low-income families.

Telecommunication Masts (Chilterns)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about applications to erect telecommunication masts in the Chilterns area of outstanding natural beauty. [89867]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department received two representations about a proposed mast at Chisley Wood, Buckmoorend.

Traffic Census (M56)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost to the local economy of his Department's traffic census on the M56 in May. [89441]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The relationship between delays to traffic and their impact on the local economy is complex and cannot be estimated for a one-off incident of this nature.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost to his Department of the traffic census carried out on the M56 in May. [89444]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The census point on the M56/Princes Parkway site was one of 70 sites being surveyed for DETR, to monitor the effect of the completion of the Manchester Outer Ring Road (M60) Denton to Middleton. The average cost per site was about £4,000.

Remand Provisions (Housing Act 1996)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will bring into force the commencement order for the remand provisions associated with section 152(2)(b) of and Schedule 15 to the Housing Act 1996. [89443]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department is aware that some local authorities take the view that non-implementation of certain provisions in Part V of the Housing Act 1996 (Conduct of Tenants) is hampering their efforts to deal with anti-social behaviour on estates. My Department is actively considering this issue and is discussing with the Lord Chancellor's Department the best way forward. I will write to my hon. Friend when we have reached a decision.

Departmental Car Pool

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cars are available for the use of (a) his Department's Ministers, (b) his Department's officials and (c) executives and officials of his Department's non-Governmental bodies and agencies. [88087]

Mr. Prescott [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1999, c. 288]: The position at March 1999 was as follows:

	Number of cars
(a) Ministers	[1]9
(b) DETR (Central)	[2]5
(c) Agencies	181

[1] leased from GCDA
[2] one leased from GCDA

In addition, the Department owns or leases 25 cars at the MAVIS (Mobility Advice Vehicle Information Service) Mobility Unit at Crowthorne. These cars are specially adapted for disabled assessment and although this is their primary purpose some are occasionally used by DETR officials on official business.

Information is not kept centrally for non-Government bodies.

My Department also has a shared responsibility (with DTI and DfEE) for the operational management of the Government Offices for the Regions. As at March 1999, there were 79 cars available for use of officials of these three departments.

SCOTLAND

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89684]

Dr. Reid: Information on market and opinion research carried out by The Scottish Office, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sports Clubs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of allowing voluntary sports clubs to become eligible for charity status. [88747]

Mr. Banks: The Charity Commission is currently undertaking a review of the Recreational Charities Act 1958, in which I am taking a close interest with Home Office colleagues who are responsible for charity issues. The outcome of the review will inform a subsequent public consultation about the charitable status of community based sports clubs. I understand that Sport England will make the case for a change to enable sports clubs to benefit from the many advantages that charitable status can offer. The Government will consider carefully the responses to the consultation.

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88482]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Officials from my Department regularly attend meetings of Council working groups. Occasionally, my Department is represented by officials from the United Kingdom's Permanent Representation of the European Union. I have listed in the table the working groups with which my Department is most closely involved, and the number of meetings attended in the last 12 months.

Lottery Funding

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if lottery funds from the World Class Performance Programme will be available for (a) chess,

(b) bridge, (c) pigeon racing and (d) hang-gliding when the new financial directions for the lottery come into force. [89142]

Mr. Banks: As a sport recognised by the UK and home Sports Councils, hang-gliding is eligible to apply for Lottery Sports funding. Lottery funds are, however, not unlimited and it will be necessary for the Sports Councils, when looking at applications, to prioritise and target awards based on criteria which they have established as the statutory distributors of Lottery funding for sport.

Currently, UK Sport and the four home country Sports Councils do not recognise bridge, chess and pigeon racing and are not eligible to receive Lottery Sports funding. We will seek to amend existing legislation when parliamentary time allows so that chess may become eligible for Lottery sports funding. The final details of the Bill have yet to be determined and we will consider again later in the year whether to extend these changes to other activities such as bridge.

Sports Governing Bodies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what powers the United Kingdom sports councils have to delegate the handling of small grants to member clubs to the governing bodies of sports; and who will be responsible for assessing whether those governing bodies have adequate administrative controls. [89145]

Mr. Banks: As independent corporate bodies set up by Royal Charter, it is for the UK and the four home country Sports Councils to determine their own spending and distribution priorities, to enable the most efficient and effective use of the public funds made available to them. Some of these funds are directed as grant-in-aid to sports governing bodies. The Sports Councils, as Lottery distributing bodies, have powers to delegate the handling of any grants made to governing bodies, member clubs and other groups. The Chief Executive of the Sports Councils act as Accounting Officers for the funding they receive and distribute and are explicitly required to ensure that any organisations given powers of delegation have suitable administrative controls and systems.

Newspapers

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for each of the last five years, how much funding was allocated to (a) the British Library, (b) Colindale Newspaper Library, (c) archiving and filming at Colindale Newspaper Library and (d) public services at Colindale Newspaper Library. [89106]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The allocations to the four categories requested are shown in cash, excluding depreciation, internal charges and internal income. They are direct costs and exclude overheads, e.g. estates expenditure.

Public services (gross)	436	446	468	496	469

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the estimated durability and life expectancy of post-1850 newspaper newsprint copies held in the national newspaper collections. [89109]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Newspapers produced in the last 150 years have not been made to last. It is estimated that the durability of newsprint is unlikely to be more than 60 years. After this time, the paper is too brittle to be handled. The British Library is addressing the problem in its retrospective transfer of newsprint to microfilm and the continuing process of microfilming all issues of UK daily and weekly national and regional newspapers received under legal deposit.

The Library is also a subscriber to Newsplan, a co-operative programme devised by public libraries, national libraries and the newspaper industry for microfilming and preservation of local newspapers and for making them accessible to users. It is estimated that, since the late 1980s, over 14,000 reels of microfilm, each corresponding to a bound volume of historic local newspapers, have been filmed by the Newspaper Library for Newsplan. In March this year, the Heritage Lottery Fund awarded £5 million in support of Newsplan.

Acid Paper

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to discourage the use of acid paper for the printing of books, newspapers and paper records; and if he will make a statement. [89110]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The National Preservation Office at the British Library (in conjunction with the Library Association and the Society of Archivists) has for several years been instrumental in promoting actively the use of acid free paper, particularly to the UK publishing community. Resolutions for the use of permanent paper were adopted by the International Publishers Association in 1989, and by UNESCO IN 1997.

Newspapers (Microfilm)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) in the national newspaper collections, how many (a) national and (b) regional newspaper titles have (i) been copied onto microfilm and (ii) remain to be copied; and, on present estimates, how long it is forecast that it will take to complete the task; [89107]

(2) for each of the last five years, how many (a) national and (b) regional newspaper titles have been copied onto microfilm by the national newspaper library collections. [89108]

Mr. Alan Howarth: On current microfilming, since 1986, the policy of the British Library Newspaper Library at Colindale has been to film all issues of UK daily and weekly national and regional newspapers received through legal deposit.

The following numbers of newspaper "titles" were in publication and received through legal deposit in each of the five years:

Year	National titles	Regional daily and weekly titles
1994–95	31	627
1995–96	31	694
1996–97	30	711
1997–98	30	709
1998–99	30	706

The serial nature of newspaper publication means that the transfer of newsprint to microfilm is a continuous process. The transfer of issues of national titles to microfilm has been given high priority and this programme is up-to-date. Material awaiting transfer from issues of regional newspaper titles would constitute five years' microfilming at present output levels.

Retrospective transfer of newsprint to microfilm is undertaken in response to customer demand (self-funded) and in the light of conservation requirements within allocated budgets.

The total number of preservation frames microfilmed from newspapers in the last five years is:

Year	Number frames
1994–95	9,976,710
1995–96	11,127,221
1996–97	15,502,623
1997–98	11,608,279
1998–99	8,288,201

The Library has increased its allocation for current and retrospective microfilming in 1999–2000 by 37 per cent. over the previous year with a view to targeting production of 11.5 million frames. Further increases are planned for the following two years.

National Lottery

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, for each year since the introduction of the National Lottery, (a) the percentage of income derived from sales in Scotland and (b) the percentage of charitable awards paid to Scottish-based voluntary organisations and charities. [89659]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 2 July 1999]: Total National Lottery ticket sales to date have reached £21 billion, of which sales in Scotland account for £1.6 billion (7.8 per cent. of ticket sales). Registered charities in Scotland have received 9.1 per cent. of all awards going to registered charities in the UK. Awards to voluntary organisations are not separately identified. The following table sets out the position in each year.

	Shares for Scotland	Percentage
	Ticket sales for Scotland as percentage of the sales	Scotland total awarded to registered charities as a percentage of awards to all charities
1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995	7.9	15.2
1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996	7.8	8.2
1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997	7.7	11.3
1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998	7.7	7.8
1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999	8.1	8.6
Total	7.8	9.1

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Law Reform Bills (Parliamentary Scrutiny)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the Government's response to the Law Commission recommendation for parliamentary procedural reform to facilitate scrutiny of law reform Bills. [87779]

Mrs. Beckett: I met the Chairman of the Law Commission on 22 June, after publication of the 33rd annual report, to discuss the enactment of Law Commission Bills. There are already special procedures in both Houses for such Bills, but modernisation of parliamentary procedures may in time create other opportunities for their scrutiny. The Government attach great importance to the work of the Law Commission. Where the Government do accept that the Commission's proposals merit legislation, we will seek to make the best use of available parliamentary time and procedures.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases there were in 1998 which were referred to the Crown Prosecution Service for criminal proceedings in which no further action was taken. [89178]

The Attorney-General: The table shows the number of cases which the Crown Prosecution Service received from the police, and the number which the Service finalised, during 1998. Both figures are inclusive of cases submitted for pre-charge advice and non-criminal proceedings, and the number of these are shown separately.

The number and proportion of cases in which a prosecution did not proceed are then shown. These outcomes are divided into cases discontinued by the Crown Prosecution Service, and those which were written off because the defendant could not be traced or had died, or because proceedings were adjourned indefinitely.

Finally, the number and proportion of cases in which a prosecution proceeded are shown, divided into those where the defendant was bound over, those which proceeded to a committal hearing, and those which proceeded to a trial or guilty plea.

A prosecution did not proceed in 251,167 cases, amounting to 18.5 per cent. of those completed during the year. However, it would not be true to say that no further action was taken in those cases. Every case received by the Crown Prosecution Service is reviewed by a lawyer, who must ascertain whether there is sufficient reliable and admissible evidence to offer a realistic prospect of conviction. If so, then the reviewing lawyer must determine whether a prosecution is in the public interest. The criteria on which these decisions are based are set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors, and are applied in every case.

If the balance of the evidence or the public interest weigh against a prosecution then the police must be consulted, wherever time allows, before a decision is taken.

Review is a continuing process, extending up until the point at which a hearing begins. Thus a case may proceed as far as the date of the trial before the need for discontinuance becomes apparent and, in these circumstances, the prosecution will have taken all the action necessary to prepare for a contested hearing.

More than half of discontinued cases are unable to proceed because: witnesses fail to appear at court, refuse to give evidence, or change their evidence; defendants produce driving documents providing their innocence on the day of trial; evidence is excluded because of irregularities in its collection; or gaps in the prosecution case cannot be plugged by the police.

Cases not proceeding include those written off as well as those discontinued. However, these are quite distinct outcomes: a write off is an administrative procedure whereby dormant cases are removed from the record of live proceedings, so giving a more accurate account of work on hand. The majority of write offs occur where the police cannot trace a defendant for the service of a summons, or where a bench warrant for arrest remains unexecuted following the defendant's failure to surrender to bail. If the defendant is subsequently arrested, the prosecution can recommence.

CABINET OFFICE

Genetic Modification Committees

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) what (a) the relationship is between and (b) the relative responsibilities are of the (i) Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology and (ii) MISC 6; [87827]

(2) what is the membership of the Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology; how often it has met; and if he will make a statement. [87826]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology (IGGMOT) is an internal forum for officials across Government to co-ordinate policy matters on genetic modification. The Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification (MISC 6) is responsible for making decisions on Government policy in respect of biotechnology. IGGMOT supports the work of Ministers by ensuring that the wide range of Government Departments with an interest in this issue are in close and regular contact with one another about developments. It is not the normal practice of Government to release details of internal discussions, advice to Ministers, specific meetings or their content. This principle is reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89693]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The information requested is not held centrally and is available only at disproportionate cost.

Public Sector Staff (Transfers)

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made on the Government's policy to protect the terms and conditions of public sector staff when they transfer to a new employer; and if he will make a statement. [90060]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have today published for public consultation a Statement of Practice for Staff Transfers in the Public Sector which should ensure that Public Private Partnership (PPP) deals and modernisation within the public sector go forward smoothly and guarantee fair and consistent treatment of employees rights—utilising the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment)—TUPE—Regulations. The publication of this Statement reaffirms our commitment in the Modernising Government White Paper to support staff by presuming TUPE protections apply.

PPPs and organisational change within the public sector have a key part to play in delivering high-quality modern public services. I want future PPPs and organisational change to be conducted with the presumption that the protections of TUPE will apply unless there are genuinely exceptional reasons not to do so, ensuring that staff involved are treated fairly and consistently and their rights protected. Clarity and certainty about the treatment of staff involved in the modernisation of the public sector is fair to staff, employers, contractors and taxpayers alike. The new Statement of Practice is designed to achieve this aim across the whole public sector.

The Statement of Practice, which includes the Chief Secretary's new policy for protecting pensions in PFI and PPP deals—14 June 1999, Official Report, column 30—will now be subject to a 3-month public consultation exercise.

The Statement of Practice, following the public consultation exercise, will apply to Government Departments and Agencies and the intention is to apply it to the NHS. I hope that other public sector employers will also apply its principles, and the Government will encourage and facilitate that outcome.

Copies of "Staff Transfers in the Public Sector; Statement of Practice" have been placed in the Library of the House.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will set out the terms of reference for the inquiry he has established into the unauthorised disclosure of material relating to the public presentation of genetically modified issues. [89452]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: An inquiry was established by the Secretary of the Cabinet on 2 March 1999 to establish the facts regarding the unauthorised disclosure of a Cabinet Office document concerning genetically modified foods.

HEALTH

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to announce the consultation arrangements in respect of the report of the Centre for Policy on Aging on National Standards for Residential and Nursing Homes, presented to him on 19 January; and if he will make a statement. [85047]

Mr. Hutton: We intend to publish the Centre for Policy on Aging report during the summer for full and extensive consultation.

Medical Staff (Pay)

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the percentage increase in pay for trainee and newly qualified (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) biomedical scientists in each year from 1990 to 1999. [86468]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Notes:

1. All staged settlements are shown in full with the date of implementation first, followed by initial payment and date.
2. In 1993 all settlements in the public sector were agreed at 1.5%.
3.  Project 2000 nurse training was fully implemented so all trainees receive a bursary.
4. Biomedical Scientists are classed as Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers (MLSOs) for pay and grading purposes.
5. Pay Offers for 1999, now subject to consultation by Staff Side with their members, would give trainee MLSOs between 6.6% and 26% and 7.1% to all MLSO1s.

GP Lists (Removals)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will implement the Health Ombudsman's recommendation that health authorities review removals from GPs' lists and conduct research on such removals. [87971]

Mr. Denham: In his evidence to the Select Committee on Public Administration, Sir Alan Langlands made a commitment to further research into the reasons why general practitioners remove patients from their lists. Funding has been arranged for this and a steering group, which will include representation from the General Practitioners Committee, will be set up.

Junior Doctors

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the hourly rate of pay for house officers working in hospitals on 31 December 1999 and 1 January 2000. [88066]

Mr. Denham: Those staff who are required by roster to work in hospitals on 31 December 1999 and 1 January 2000 will receive their normal rate of pay: 100 per cent. for their standard hours, and payments for additional duty hours at the rate appropriate to their working pattern. Doctors rostered for duty on either of these two bank holidays will also receive time off in lieu.

The payment of additional duty hours (ADHs) for a 72 hour week adds an extra 40 per cent. to the basic salary of a junior doctor, enhancing the basic salary from £16,710 for a first year house officer to £23,394 when ADHs are included.

Pay for first year house officers expressed as an hourly rate is £8.04 for each standard hour of duty. A class 1 (full shift) additional duty hour (ADH) will be paid at £8.04; a class 2 (partial shift) ADH will be paid at £5.63; and a class 3 (on-call) ADH will be paid at £4.02. Doctors in more senior training grades will receive higher pay rates according to their incremental point: for example, a specialist registrar on the fourth point of scale would receive ADHs at the hourly rate of £12.90, £9.63 and £6.45 respectively. The basic salary scale for an SpR is from £23,300 to £33,965. When ADH rates are included the total salary payable ranges from £32,617 to £45,571. For senior house officers the basic salary scale is from £20,845 to £27,845 and, including ADHs, the total salary payable ranges from £29,176 to £38,993.

Diamorphine

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has made recommendations on dosages of Diamorphine that can be given to patients suffering from a terminal condition. [87990]

Ms Jowell: In June 1998 the Department endorsed and distributed throughout the National Health Service three documents of good practice in palliative care, produced by the National Council for Hospice and Specialist Palliative Care Services. One of these documents was "Guidelines for Managing Cancer Pain in Adults", which was designed for use by health professionals in primary care and institutional settings and includes guidance on dosages of Diamorphine for terminally ill patients. Copies are available in the Library.

Women's Unit

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) reports and (b) research have been produced by the Women's Unit; when these were produced; and which have been published. [88388]

Ms Jowell: The Women's Unit has produced the following:

(a) Reports and Guidance

National Childcare Strategy (with Department for Education and Employment) May 1998

Policy Appraisal for equal treatment, (with the Home Office and DfEE) on 9 November 1999

Delivering for women: Progress so far, on 9 November 1998

(b) Research

Tackling violence against women, on 9 November 1998

Researching Women's Attitudes, on 9 November 1998

Women's attitudes to combining paid work and family life, on 31 March 1999

Citizens' Juries: An appraisal of their role based on the conduct of two women only juries, on 31 March 1999

Relationship Breakdown: a Guide for Social Landlords (with Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and Department of Health), on 18 May 1999

Living Without Fear: An integrated approach to tackling violence against women, on 30 June 1999.

The reports and research have all been published. The Women's Unit has also contributed to a wide range of other Government publications and reports.

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88473]

Ms Jowell: Officials from the Department regularly attend meetings of Council working groups. Occasionally the Department is represented by officials from the United Kingdom's Permanent Representation to the European Union. The Department is most closely involved with the Health working group which has met 18 times in the last 12 months. Officials from the Department also attend meetings of the Economic Questions. Social Affairs, and Youth working groups when relevant issues are discussed.

Influenza

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of last winter's influenza epidemic to his Department. [88774]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not available centrally.

Cancer Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 416, if he will list the cancer centres in the West Midlands. [88734]

Mr. Hutton: The following hospitals in the West Midlands Region have designated cancer centres:

University Hospital Birmingham National Health Services Trust

Walsgrave Hospitals NHS Trust

Royal Wolverhampton NHS Trust

North Staffordshire NHS Trust

Royal Shrewsbury Hospital NHS Trust, which is a joint cancer centre with North Staffordshire Hospital Trust cancer centre.

These centres are designated for treating certain types of cancer, and not necessarily all cancers.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage profit made by drug companies on each individual drug used in cancer treatment. [88729]

Mr. Hutton: The Government indirectly control the prices of branded prescription medicines supplied to the National Health Service by the pharmaceutical industry through the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (PPRS). Companies have freedom of pricing for new medicines launched on the market, although the PPRS controls the profits that pharmaceutical companies are allowed t make through their trade with the NHS.

Under the PPRS, pharmaceutical companies are required to submit annual financial returns to the Department of Health reporting, among other things, sales, research and development expenditure, other costs and profits. These returns, however, are reported in aggregate form. It is not possible, therefore, to identify separately the profits made by pharmaceutical companies on individual medicines.

Special Advisers (Costs)

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will (1) list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997; [76828]

(2) what was the total cost, including travel and accommodation, of each occasion when a special adviser from his Department travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997, whether accompanied by a Minister or not, indicating the place visited. [89066]

Ms Jowell: Between 2 May 1997 and 30 June 1999, special advisers have accompanied my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State abroad on six occasions to America, Brussels and Madrid at a total cost of £6,370.

All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Maternity Units

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the midwife lead maternity units without a full consultant unit on site. [88930]

Ms Jowell: The Department does not collect the information requested. Details of local maternity service provision can be obtained from health authorities and individual National Health Service trusts. They are responsible for decisions about patterns of service delivery taking account of the needs of local people, evidence of effectiveness and available resources.

Vaccinations

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the present methods of reporting adverse reactions to vaccination; and if he will make a statement. [88806]

Ms Jowell: The safety of medicines, including vaccines, in the United Kingdom is continuously monitored by the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) and the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). Various data sources are used including spontaneously reported adverse drug reactions (ADRs), company produced periodic safety update reports, clinical trials and epidemiological studies such as the recent North Thames study on MMR vaccine.

Under the UK spontaneous reporting (Yellow Card) Scheme, doctors, dentists, hospital pharmacists and coroners may report adverse drug reactions to the CSM and MCA. Pharmaceutical companies have a statutory obligation to report suspected adverse reactions received world wide in relation to their products.

The Yellow Card Scheme is regularly reviewed by the MCA and CSM and initiatives are undertaken to strengthen reporting when necessary.

The reporting of suspected ADRs to vaccines through the Yellow Card Scheme was specifically reviewed by the MCA and CSM in 1997.

Market Testing

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given to NHS trusts on market testing their insurance requirements; and if he will make a statement. [89081]

Mr. Denham: Historically, National Health Service trusts have not been required to market test their insurance requirements. As with other goods and services, however, they have been expected to obtain best value for money. Since 1 April this year trusts have only been permitted to renew commercial insurance to cover motor vehicle risks. They are now able to cover other non-clinical risks—mainly buildings, property and liabilities—by membership of two new NHS risk pools established under Section 21 of the NHS and Community Care Act, 1990. Alternatively, they may choose to self-indemnify. These new arrangements are already significantly reducing the overall cost of insurance to the NHS, releasing additional money for patient care.

NHS Direct

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the planned cost of NHS Direct in the current year. [89060]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 June 1999]: £54 million has been allocated in 1999–2000 to NHS Direct.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many calls have been made to the NHS Direct phone line to date; and what was the average cost per call. [89057]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Over 250,000 calls have been made to the NHS Direct phone line since its launch in March 1998. While call volumes are building up rapidly it is not possible to provide a realistic estimate of the average cost per call.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change has been recorded in the number of visits to general practitioners' surgeries and accident and emergency units in those areas where the first three pilots of NHS Direct were established. [89054]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Sheffield University's Medical Care Research Unit has been commissioned to carry out an evaluation of the first wave pilots of NHS Direct. Data, in their first interim report published in March 1999, on the impact of NHS Direct on other services covered only the first 5 months of operation of NHS Direct and the researchers concluded that it would have been surprising to have seen any measurable impact at such an early stage. Monitoring of this data is continuing and a further report will be published later in the year.

GP Consultations

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost of an average GP consultation in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99; and what is the forecast cost for 1999–2000; [89058]

(2) how many general practitioner consultations took place in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99; and what number is forecast for 1999–2000. [89059]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 June 1999]: The information is not available in the form requested. The latest information collected (and published as figure 4.18 in the Departmental Report for 1999–2000) relates to 1996–97 when there were estimated to be 270.97 million consultations with general practitioners. These data were based on the General Household Survey and may overestimate the number of consultations.

Hospital Waiting Times (Oxfordshire)

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of patients waiting over 13 weeks for an outpatient appointment following a written referral from their GP in the Oxfordshire Health Authority area in (a) March 1996, (b) March 1997, (c) March 1998 and (d) March 1999. [89072]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is as follows:

(a) These figures were not collected.

(b) These figures were not collected.

(c) 1,136

(d) 2,006.

GP Prescribing

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the cost effectiveness of GP prescribing. [89091]

Mr. Denham: The Government continue to encourage general practitioners to prescribe cost effectively. A number of measures are in place to help them to achieve this, for example the employment of prescribing advisers by health authorities. Recent developments such as the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will also help to ensure cost effective prescribing.

Patient Satisfaction Survey

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on publishing patient satisfaction survey results for each NHS trust. [89084]

Mr. Denham: The Government are committed to publishing national and local results of the national survey of National Health Service patients. As part of this programme, a survey of patients with coronary heart disease is underway, and we expect to publish headline results in due course.

Health Products

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to health specialists on the altered status of particular health substances following the Government's consultation document MLX 249. [89290]

Ms Jowell: No guidance is required. The proposals in the consultation document MLX 249 will not alter the status or classification of health products.

Processed Food (Salt Content)

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his discussions with the food industry on reducing the salt content of processed food. [89298]

Ms Jowell: Following initial discussions between the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food/Department of Health Joint Food Safety and Standards Group and the Food and Drink Federation (FDF) which represents the food and drink manufacturing industry) to explore the scope for broadening public choice in, and reducing, the salt content of processed foods, the FDF has announced that it will be conducting a systematic review of the purpose and usage of sodium in manufactured foods. We have welcomed this review.

Millennium Compliance (West Kent)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that the computer systems in use by the West Kent Health Authority are millennium compliant and that hospital and health provision will not be affected on 1 January 2000; [89185]

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that the computer systems in use by the Kent Ambulance Service are millennium compliant and that emergency services will not be affected on 1 January 2000. [89184]

Mr. Denham: Detailed local arrangements for the National Health Service and social services in planning for winter 1999–2000 including the millennium period were set out in a joint circular to the National Health Service and Social Services (LAC(99)15) in April 1999. Copies are available in the Library.

Kent Ambulance NHS Trust and West Kent Health Authority are making good progress towards ensuring year 2000 compliance.

Progress is monitored quarterly by the National Health Service Executive to ensure robust arrangements are in place to deliver services for the coming winter including the millennium period.

Cloning

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on therapeutic cloning of human tissue. [89181]

Ms Jowell: The use of cloning techniques on non-embryonic human cells and tissue is a long-established medical practice for the treatment of serious disorders. This may include treatment using vaccines developed with cloning technology, or tissue grants such as skin for burn victims.

In December 1998 the joint Human Genetics Advisory Commission (HGAC) and Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) report "Cloning Issues in Reproduction, Science and Medicine" was published. The Report recommended, among other things, that the Government should consider making regulations under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 to extend the purposes for which human embryos may be used in research to include particular therapeutic purposes.

The Government's response to the joint HGAC/HFEA report, 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 436, reaffirmed their policy that human reproductive cloning is ethically unacceptable and cannot take place in this country. However, we recognise that the recommendation to extend the regulations to allow research for particular therapeutic purposes should be very carefully considered. We believe that more evidence is required of the need for using human embryos in such research, its potential benefits and risks and also that account should be taken of alternative approaches that might achieve the same ends.

We announced that a group chaired by the Chief Medical Officer would be set up to examine these issues and report early next year. We expect to announce the membership of that group shortly.

Agency Nurses

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department takes (a) to monitor the cost of agency recruited nurses and (b) to give guidance to health purchasers on appropriate charges for agency nurses. [89383]

Ms Jowell: The National Health Service Executive is working with the Social Partnership Forum to review the use of bank and agency staff and the alternative approaches to employment flexibility, with a view to recommending good practice guidance to NHS employers.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to the NHS in London of (a) hiring a nurse through an agency and (b) recruiting a nurse of comparable grade through the NHS. [89382]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

NHS Staff Pay

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the letter dated 1 February sent by the Chief Executive of the NHS to NHS trusts and health authorities concerning pay for staff in 1999–2000. [89587]

Mr. Denham: Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library.

Clinical Terms

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the formal review of Read Codes 3 will take place. [89651]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Levitt) on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 270–71.

The independent evaluation of the Read Codes is taking place in the following three stages.

(i) An assessment of the need for clinical terminology and the robustness of Clinical Terms Version 3 against alternatives;

(ii) Development of a methodology for evaluating clinical codes in use;

(iii) A process of continuous evaluation in live use in clinical practice.

The first stage has been completed, and copies of the report are available in the Library. A contract has been awarded after open competition to First Consulting Group for the second stage. The methodology for the evaluation of clinical terminology will be developed by September 1999. It will then be rigorously trialled in the National Health Service in preparation for stage 3.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner practices are using Read Codes Version 3. [89647]

Mr. Denham: Records indicate that 41 software system suppliers to the National Health Service have licences giving them access to Version 3 of the Read Codes (CTV3). Suppliers are building systems to support CTV3 to underpin the development of the Electronic Patients Record in full. Current software in common use by general practitioners is based on earlier versions of the Read Codes.

The NHS Executive intends to mandate the use of a coded clinical terminology (currently Clinical Terms Version 3 (Read Codes)) which is a central plank of the NHS Information Management and Technology Strategy "Information for Health", published in September 1998. This is a pre-requisite for the development of the Electronic Health record which is the cornerstone of the strategy.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis Mr. Roger Browell was selected for the Phase 1 Read Codes Review. [89656]

Mr. Denham: Roger Browell was selected for the Phase 1 Read Codes evaluation via the Strategic Assignment Consultancy Service (SACS) of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA).

SACS is an established service whereby CCTA procures consultants with a wide experience of Information Services and Information Technology. CCTA was asked to procure an independent consultant with no previous input to the work area in order to maintain independence.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts are using Read Codes Version 3 on a hospital-wide basis; and in which hospitals. [89646]

Mr. Denham: Licensing records indicate that 41 software system suppliers to the National Health Service and 149 NHS trusts have access to Version 3 of the Read Codes. Records also indicate that the Version 2 terms in a Version 3 file format is used in Scotland and by one system supplier with several sites in England.

Health Act 1999

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to use his order-making powers under schedule 3 of the Health Bill [Lords]. [89464]

Mr. Denham: The powers in Section 60 of what is now the Health Act 1999 allow for the regulation of new professions and the strengthening of existing regulatory schemes by Order. We intend to use these powers to fulfil our commitment to work with the professions to strengthen and modernise the existing systems of health professional self-regulation.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if NHS trusts are free to use private sector insurance to obtain clinical negligence cover. [89354]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 2 July 1999]: There is no legal impediment to a National Health Service trust using commercial insurance for clinical negligence risks. However, the NHS Executive has always strongly discouraged trusts from doing so on the basis that it does not represent good value for money, and trusts have accepted that advice. The Clinical Negligence Scheme for trusts was established to help trusts manage their clinical negligence liabilities. At present all trusts are members of that Scheme.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from whom the Clinical Negligence Scheme for Trusts has sought reinsurance; and if the reinsurance was competitively tendered. [89355]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 2 July 1999]: The Clinical Negligence Scheme for trusts is a voluntary risk pooling scheme set up under Section 21 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to help NHS trusts manage their clinical negligence liabilities. It is self-funding through annual contributions from member trusts. At present all NHS trusts are members of the scheme. Individual members' contributions are assessed according to the type of services they provide and their past claims history.

Prescriptions Charges

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which patients qualify for free prescriptions; which illnesses qualify patients for free prescriptions; and if he will make a statement. [89663]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 2 July 1999]: The information requested is contained in leaflet HC11 "Are you entitled to help with health costs?", copies of which are available in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Visits

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what dates she and the Minister of State plan to be absent from the office in 1999; [89618]

(2) what overseas visits are proposed for (a) her and (b) Ministers in her Department from 1 July to 1 December. [89617]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 2 July 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have planned overseas visits on Government business up to 1 December 1999 as follows:

Date	Destination	Project
5–9 July	Nicaragua and Honduras	DFID Projects
19–21 July	Sierra Leone	DFID Projects
28–30 July	Brussels	Lome Ministerial meetings
30 August–3 September	Bolivia	DFID Projects
25–27 September	Washington	IMF/World Bank meetings
29 September	New York	Ministerial Group on Environment and Poverty

Both the Secretary of State's and my diaries for the rest of the year are likely to include speaking engagements and overseas travel which are as yet undetermined.

My ministerial responsibilities involve working from offices in East Kilbride and London.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list actual and planned expenditure in each financial year by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) market research, (b) conferences, (c) direct mail, (d) advertising and publicity, (e) opinion polling, (f) websites, (g) hospitality, (h) central administration costs and (i) external consultants and advisers on (i) summer literacy schools, (ii) the National Grid for Learning, (iii) the New Deal for Schools Phase 3 and (iv) special educational needs. [88182]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following tables list the actual and planned expenditure for the financial years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 as appropriate. These costs represent expenditure which has been identified as additional to that which would have been incurred as part of the normal operational activity.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school playing fields were sold (a) between 1979 and 1997 and (b) from May 1997 to date; and how these figures were collated. [88662]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department did not collect information in the form requested before 1 October 1998, when section 77 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 came into force. However, sports bodies suggest that under the previous Government 40 playing fields a month were being sold off. Since 1 October 1998 an average of 8 applications a month have been approved. Because of the tightening up of the rules, local authorities are usually only putting forward proposals which meet our very strict criteria which have been further strengthened by new guidance we published on 7 June.

Schools Funding

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority the percentage share of the local schools' budget delegated to schools, calculated to take account of whether an authority has capitalised Standard Fund money or delegated it to schools. [89153]

Ms Estelle Morris: Tables which the Government published on 24 June showed, in column 2, the percentage of each local education authority's Local Schools Budget being delegated to schools this year. Delegated funding in this context took [redacted] account that part of an authority's Standards Fund programme which they were devolving to schools. We expect authorities to exclude from their Local Schools Budget any grant-supported expenditure of a capital nature.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to implement the policies outlined in the Green Paper, Excellence for All Children: Meeting Special Educational Needs. [89339]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We received over 3,600 responses to consultation on the proposals in the Green Paper, "Excellence for all children: meeting special educational needs". In the light of those responses, and advice from the National Advisory Group on Special Educational Needs, we published "Meeting Special Educational Needs: A programme of action" in November 1998. The Action Programme explains how we will implement our policies for children with special educational needs for the remainder of this Parliament.

Deprived Areas (Educational Achievement)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to raise parents' expectations of their children's educational achievement in deprived areas. [89340]

Ms Estelle Morris: Involving parents in their children's learning is crucial to raising their expectations and we are pursuing a number of initiatives to encourage them to be actively involved. Parents have an important role to play in helping to raise standards in Education Action Zones and in the new "Excellence in Cities" initiative.

We are supporting family literacy and family numeracy courses, targeted on parents and children with low basic skills, often in deprived areas. Many parents are helping with our summer school pilots this year, several of which are targeted at pupils in deprived areas who might not otherwise have access to the opportunities offered. And our "Playing for Success" initiative is establishing study support centres with Premier League and Nationwide Division One football clubs, most of which are situated in deprived areas. The centres target local pupils who have lost motivation, involving their parents through pre-course meetings and questionnaires.

The publication of school performance tables enables parents to look at the results obtained by similar schools and encourages them to demand more of those in which their children are educated.

Head Teachers

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken to increase the (a) support for and (b) training of head teachers. [89362]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on 10 June 1999, Official Report, column 390.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he has taken to monitor the impact of equal opportunities legislation on recruitment, pay and promotion opportunities of (a) male, (b) female, (c) disabled and (d) ethnic minority university research and teaching staff; and what were the results of this monitoring. [89563]

Ms Hodge: The Government have promoted the recommendation of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education (the Dearing Committee) that all higher education institutions should review their Equal Opportunities policies, and identify and remove barriers to recruitment and progression for particular groups. The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Commission on University Career Opportunity are advising institutions on equal opportunities policies and monitoring their implementation in the sector.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local authority received the highest level of support through ethnic minority achievement grant for 1999–2000. [89439]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 2 July 1999]: In 1999–2000, Tower Hamlets local education authority will receive the highest level of support—an allocation of £8,125,390.

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local authority contributed the greatest amount towards ethnic minority achievement grant for 1999–2000. [89437]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 2 July 1999]: In 1999–2000, Bradford local education authority will make the greatest contribution—50 per cent. of its allocation of £7,569,000.

LEAs (Strategic Management)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will rank each local education authority according to the value of its budget for strategic management in 1999–2000 as a percentage of that for management and administration in 1998–99; and if he will show those percentages and values distinguishing the authorities with grant-maintained schools in 1998–99. [89740]

Ms Estelle Morris: Direct comparison cannot be drawn between local authorities' estimated expenditure on management and administration for 1998–99 and their estimated expenditure on strategic management for 1999–2000 in view of the very different definitions set down in regulations. Figures extracted from the statements for 1998–99 prepared under section 122 of the Education Act 1996 and for 1999–2000 prepared under section 52 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 are provided in the following table.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will rank each local education authority according to the value of the schools components of its Standard Spending Assessment for 1999–2000 as a percentage of the value of those components for 1998–99; and if he will show those percentages and values distinguishing the authorities with grant maintained schools in 1998–99. * LEAs with grant-maintained schools

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the differences between spending shown in local education authorities' section 52 statements and that shown in their section 122 statement for 1998–99 which are attributable to the existence of grant maintained schools. [89745]

Ms Estelle Morris: Estimated expenditure on schools which were grant maintained in the financial year 1998–99 was not required to be included in budget statements prepared by local education authorities under section 122 of the Education Act 1996 since these schools were funded direct by the Funding Agency for Schools. Budget statements prepared under section 52 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 cover estimated expenditure for the financial year 1999–2000. Whilst grant-maintained status remains until the end of August, local education authorities have been responsible for passing on funding to these schools since 1 April and section 52 statements include the full year's funding, together with any transitional protection to which individual schools may be entitled.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will rank each local education authority according to the value of its individual schools budget for 1999–2000 as a percentage of the value of its Aggregate Schools Budget for 1998–99; and if he will show those percentages and values distinguishing the authorities with grant maintained schools. [89737]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows for local education authorities in England, ranked from the highest to the lowest, the Individual Schools Budget for 1999–2000 as a percentage of the Aggregated Schools Budget for 1998–99. Those local education authorities with grant maintained schools are indicated by an asterisk.

* LEAs with grant-maintained schools

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local education authorities which failed to meet the statutory deadlines (a) for notifying their fair-funding budget shares to schools and (b) for supplying to him details of their fair-funding schemes for 1999–2000, stating in each case the date by which the information was supplied. [89700]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on the notification of budget shares to schools is not collected centrally. All authorities' schemes for the financing of schools made under section 48 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 were approved by 31 March 1999.

Learning Difficulties (Spending)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the amount of special needs provision (a) nationally and (b) in Gloucestershire in terms of children with (i) moderate learning difficulties, (ii) severe learning difficulties and (iii) emotional and behavioural difficulties, in the most recent year for which figures are available. [89744]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The latest available data drawn from Annual Schools' Census returns relates to January 1998. The number of children with a statement of special educational needs nationally is 242,294 and in Gloucestershire 2,539. Information is not collected centrally by type of special need.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he is taking to ensure that all public buildings and facilities comply with the standards set out in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [89209]

Ms Hodge: The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 does not set specific standards for buildings or facilities. Rather, it requires employers and service providers to make reasonable adjustments for disabled people.

The new duties on those who provide goods, facilities and services to the public to make reasonable adjustments for disabled people are coming into force on 1 October, although service providers will not be required to make physical adjustments to their premises until 2004. The October phase of implementation is being supported by a revised Code of Practice which was issued on 29 June. The Code gives guidance to service providers about their responsibilities under the Act and how to adopt good practice. A similar Code of Practice in respect of employers' duties under the Act was issued in 1996. In addition, other information for service providers and employers can be obtained from the DDA Helpline and more will become available as 1 October approaches.

Whether a service provider or employer has fulfilled their duties under the DDA can only be determined when an individual pursues a claim through an Employment Tribunal or the Courts. However, we are currently taking legislation through Parliament to establish the Disability Rights Commission which will support disabled people in securing their rights under the Act and seek to ensure that employers and service providers who discriminate change their practices and procedures. The Commission will also work to promote good practice among service providers and employers, and be a central source of information and advice about the DDA.

A campaign to raise awareness about the DDA, and disability in general, with employers and service providers, as well as the general public is currently underway. From 1 July, national newspaper advertisements have been alerting service providers to the new rights in respect of access to goods, facilities and services. Further newspaper and radio advertisements are planned for the autumn. The campaign will also be working with intermediaries such as the CBI, British Chambers of Commerce and the Local Government Association to ensure that all service providers, in both the public and private sector, are aware of the new rights and duties.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997, stating in each case whether the results were published. [89699]

Mr. Mudie: Assembling this information will take a few days. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

New Deal (Lone Parents)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in respect of the New Deal for Lone Parents, how many (a) participants have been invited to interview, (b) interviews have been booked, (c) interviews have been attended by participants and (d) jobs have been attained. [89706]

Ms Hodge: From April this year, the Government Statistical Service will be reporting independently on New Deal for Lone Parent (NDLP) results, and reports will be published on the first Thursday of every month.

The first report was published on 1 July, and for the period since the full national roll-out of the New Deal for Lone Parents' programme, i.e. from 26 October 1998 to 30 April 1999, the figures requested are:

377,840 lone parents were sent an initial invitation letter.

66,832 initial interviews were booked.

57,500 lone parents attended an initial interview.

11,200 lone parents obtained employment: these jobs are in addition to the 5,400 already helped into work during the earlier phases of the programme.

Copies of the full report are available in the Library.

WALES

Ancient Monuments (Disabled Access)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the arrangement for disabled access to Skenfrith Castle in Monmouthshire; [89447]

(2) what statutory responsibilities CADW has to ensure that ancient monuments in Wales are accessible to people with disabilities who need wheelchairs. [89446]

Mr. Michael: These are matters for the National Assembly for Wales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wal-Mart/Asda Merger

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the effect on farm gate prices of purchasing policies following the proposed merger between Wal-Mart and Asda. [89258]

Mr. Nick Brown: The purchasing policies of individual supermarkets are primarily a matter for the businesses concerned. The Competition Commission is conducting a 12 month investigation of grocery retailing and will examine, as part of that review, the nature of the relationships between the multiples and their suppliers including agricultural producers.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to answer parliamentary question 81263, a holding answer for which was given on 19 April. [89743]

Mr. Rooker: I replied to the hon. Member on 20 April.

Genetic Modification

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the extent to which the UK is permitted to impose restrictions on the growing of GM foods without the permission of the European Union. [88945]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 29 June 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The release into the environment and the marketing of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are regulated by Council Directive 90/220/EEC. All such releases are carried out following a scientific assessment of risk carried out case-by-case on the basis of an environmental risk assessment. All authorisations for the experimental release of GMOs are issued by the UK authorities on the basis of this Directive. The UK authorities may impose specific conditions on any release, and may suspend a release where there is evidence of harm to human health or the environment.

Consents to market GMO products (Part C consents under the Directive) are issued at Community level in order to secure the single market for these products. Notifications on the basis of the Directive are submitted through the competent authority of one member state and all other competent authorities may then comment upon the application. If there are differences between member states, the matter is resolved by qualified majority voting.

Restrictions may always be imposed to take account of specific environmental conditions in member states, and the safeguard clause allows member states to suspend any release immediately if evidence emerges of harm to human health or the environment. This is subject to confirmation within three months at Community level.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of families earning more than (a) £20,000, (b) £25,000 and (c) £30,000 a year who will be eligible for the working families tax credit. [88906]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that in 2000–01, the first full year of the Working Families Tax Credit, about 1.4 million families will be in receipt of the credit. About 100,000 families will have earnings over £20,000. The numbers of families in receipt of the credit with earnings over £25,000 and over £30,000 are so small that reliable estimates are not available.

Scottish Widows

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many life insurance ISAs are accounted for by policies with Scottish Widows. [89353]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 2 July 1999]: None. We understand that Scottish Widows does not offer policies suitable for inclusion in life insurance ISAs.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the terms of the contract of the head of the FSA. [R] [89329]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 1 July 1999]: The head of the FSA was appointed in 1997 for a five year fixed term, which expires on 31 July 2002. His salary and other benefits are set out in the Notes to the Accounts of the FSA's Annual Report.

Inland Revenue 35

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made in the Government's Impact Assessment of the effects of the implementation of the IR35 proposals on small business failures. [89316]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 July 1999]: The National Insurance compliance implications for small businesses are set out in the Regulatory Impact Assessment of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. The Government are continuing to consult with business representatives on the actual detail of the proposals. Those being consulted include small businesses and their representatives.

Tax-free Savings

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the benefits of (1) streamlining tax-free savings schemes by merging PEPs and ISAs; [R] [89324]

(2) if he will assess the benefits of merging single company PEPs and general PEPs. [R] [89323]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 1 July 1999]: In the light of responses to the initial public consultation on the shape of the ISA scheme, we concluded that existing PEPs at 5 April 1999 should continue, separately from ISAs, under the existing PEP rules. This decision reflects the wishes of a majority of respondents to the consultation and has been approved by Parliament.

However, as my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Airdrie and Shotts (Mrs. Liddell) made clear to the hon. Member during the Committee stage of last year's Finance Bill, 4 June 1998, Official Report, Standing Committee E, column 524, we will be keeping the position under review.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many investors have taken out life insurance ISAs; [R] [89325]

(2) how many people have taken out (a) maxi and (b) mini ISAs and how many took out general and single company PEPs at the same stage in the financial year last year; [R] [89322]

(3) what is the amount of money invested in cash ISAs to date as a proportion of overall investment in ISAs; [R] [89703]

(4) what is the amount of money invested in life insurance ISAs to date as a proportion of overall investment in ISAs. [R] [89704]

Ms Hewitt: [holding answer 1 July 1999]: Over £4 billion were contributed to ISAs in the first two months after their introduction. This is twice the comparable figures for PEPs and TESSAs in the same period last year.

Bank of England figures show over £3 billion saved in ISA cash accounts operated by banks and building societies and AUTIF figures show over £1 billion saved in ISAs investing in authorised unit trusts and OEICs in April and May. The available figures do not include ISA investment in other areas such as individual shares, or life insurance ISAs, so the full total will be higher.

ISA managers are required to make a quarterly statistical return, which will identify subscriptions made to mini and maxi ISAs, and to individual components, on a quarterly basis. The first return is due to be received in August. The Inland Revenue will be publishing ISA statistics on a quarterly basis, starting later this year.

Reliable comparisons with PEP take-up in earlier years cannot be made on a quarterly basis as statistical returns from PEP managers identify subscriptions only on an annual basis.

Health and Education Spending

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the extra £40 billion allocated to health and education spending over the next three years in the 1999 Budget and the Comprehensive Spending Review, how much has been allocated to specific programmes; and if he will give a breakdown of how the allocated funds will be spent. [89528]

Mr. Milburn: The allocation of health and education spending to specific programmes is set out in the following Departmental Reports listing the Government's Expenditure Plans for 1999–2000 to 2001–02: the Department for Education and Employment and Office for Standards in Educations (Cm 4202); the Department of Health (Cm 4203); the Scottish Office (Cm 4215); the Welsh Office (Cm 4216) and Northern Ireland (Cm 4217).

Disabled Person's Tax Credit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the annual cost of the disabled person's tax credit is estimated to be in 2010. [89874]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the cost of the Disabled Person's Tax Credit in 2010.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 5 March, 15 April and 27 May with regard to Mrs. M. Wilson from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton. [89958]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has written to my right hon. Friend.

Death Totals

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the statistical significance of the fluctuations in death totals in the past three years measured over the previous 52 weeks published in ONS (99) 224. [89648]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 5 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question asking what assessment has been made of the statistical significance of the fluctuations in death registration totals in the past three years measured over the previous 52 weeks published in News Release ONS (99) 224.

Fluctuations in annual death totals are primarily related to mortality in the winter months. Deaths from all causes increase during the winter but the magnitude of this increase varies considerably from year to year, depending on, for example, temperature and the incidence of influenza.

There was a sharp peak in mortality in the 1996/7 winter. This was described and statistically analysed in the ONS publication, Population Trends No. 90, Winter 1997—Mortality during the 1996/7 Winter, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons library.

In the first part of January 1999 there was a higher than expected winter influenza activity. Such activity is known to lead to an increase in respiratory disease deaths generally, not just influenza deaths. This is reflected in the date presented in News Release ONS (99) 224.

The increase in winter mortality for 1997/8 was less pronounced than for the winters before and after.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89173]

Mr. Vaz: Of statutory instruments (SIs) introduced by my Department in 1998, 1992, 1985 and 1973, one in 1985 included amendments to rules of court resulting from legislation implementing the Brussels Convention. Otherwise, no SIs were made by my Department in the specified years to comply with European Community obligations.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women from ethnic communities are justices of the peace serving in courts in the Greater London area; what were the figures in (a) 1990 and (b) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [89176]

Mr. Hoon: I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks for 1990 and 1995 because this information was not collected. In July 1998, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor issued revised Directions to Advisory Committees requiring, among other things, that they keep information about the gender and ethnicity of magistrates. The first full set of figures will be available in January 2000. The latest figures available (which draw partly on a survey in May 1997) show that there are 199 women from the ethnic minorities serving as justices of the peace in Greater London.

"Who Decides?"

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he proposes to publish the results of his consultation on the Green Paper "Who Decides?", published on 10 September 1997. [89179]

Mr. Vaz: The Government published the consultation paper "Who Decides?" in December 1997 about the recommendations of the Law Commission on decision-making for mentally incapacitated adults. We wish to give very careful consideration to all the issues involved before deciding the way forward. No decisions have yet been taken on whether there should be legislation and, if so, when it should be introduced.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997, stating in each case whether the results were published. [89695]

Mr. Vaz: The information is shown in the table.

DEFENCE

BAe Closure (Dunsfold)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what action is being taken to ensure continued operational support for RAF Harriers following BAe's announcement of the closure of its Dunsfold factory; [89347]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect the closure of BAe Dunsfold will have on the ongoing operational support for Royal Navy Harriers; and if he will make a statement. [89348]

Mr. Spellar: Ministry of Defence contracts with British Aerospace for Harrier work are negotiated with, and awarded to, the British Aerospace Military Aircraft and Aerostructures Division at Warton. Work continues on existing contracts. The decision about where work is undertaken on these, or any future contracts, is ultimately a matter for the company.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89988]

Mr. George Robertson: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

Defence Diplomacy Scholarship Scheme

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the launch of his Department's Defence Diplomacy Scholarship Scheme. [90046]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Diplomacy Mission has placed renewed emphasis on the provision of high quality defence related training and education in Britain for overseas students, for which we already have an excellent reputation.

As part of this wider initiative, I am pleased to announce the launch of the MOD's new two-tier Defence Diplomacy Scholarship Scheme. Its principal aims are to introduce selected overseas officers and officials to the principles of Defence Diplomacy, and to help them develop the skills needed to lead and run modern democratically accountable armed forces.

Cranfield University at the Royal College of Military Science will run this scheme. It will comprise a year long MSc based "Defence Diplomacy Fellowship" and a shorter seven-week "Diploma in Defence Diplomacy". Up to 12 Fellowships will be offered annually, starting from the next academic year (1999–2000). A further 30–40 places will be available annually for the shorter Diploma course.

This scheme is further evidence of the high priority that the MOD attaches to the Defence Diplomacy Mission, and is an excellent example of the MOD's contribution to the Government's initiative to attract more international students to the UK.

Chief Scientific Adviser

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who the new Chief Scientific Adviser to his Department will be. [90251]

Mr. George Robertson: I am announcing today that Professor Sir Keith O'Nions will become the Chief Scientific Adviser to the MOD on 4 January 2000. His appointment will be for three years.

KFOR

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the contribution to KFOR. [90303]

Mr. George Robertson: Some elements of the UK contribution to KFOR have now completed the tasks for which they were deployed. In the light of this, I have agreed to the withdrawal of the Headquarters of the 5th Airborne Brigade, Headquarters 3(UK) Division, and seven support helicopters, together with their supporting elements. HQ 5 Airborne Brigade and the helicopters will start moving immediately, to be followed by HQ 3(UK) Division from 23 July. These withdrawals will not affect the number of UK battalions in KFOR, nor their ability to perform their assigned tasks.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost-benefit analyses carried out in connection with his proposal for a Public Private Partnership for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. [89202]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The study team's primary objective was to find a long-term solution for the future of DERA which would provide MOD with the scientific services it will continue to need. These were defined by the "MOD Customer Needs Statement" as laid down in Figure 1 of the Consultation Document and were used as option evaluation criteria throughout the study, to identify both the benefits and risks of each option.

A financial model, supported by some analytical work, was used to assess each option against the financial objectives.

The three requirements shown at Paragraph 13 of the consultation document, "capability", "financial" and "wider issues", were judged to be interdependent. MOD did not assign quantitative weightings between them. Although no formal cost-benefit analysis is available, iterative judgments were made throughout the options process on the relative benefits, risks and costs of each option.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under his Public Private Partnership proposals for DERA, if, when property is transferred to a new private sector owner, his Department retains liability for clearing contaminated land and unexploded ordnance. [89195]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: No decisions have been made on the nature of a Public Private Partnership, PPP, for DERA, and it is too early to speculate on the precise form it would take. The MOD study team is supported by legal experts who provide advice on a range of legal and commercial issues, including the future treatment of liabilities. The details have not yet been addressed as they will depend on the precise nature of the PPP. During implementation, further work would be required on the negotiation of such liabilities between MOD and DERA.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what ways DERA's relationships with the Research Councils will be affected by his public private partnership proposals for DERA. [89197]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The MOD strives to develop and maintain close working relationships with all relevant scientific and research bodies, including the Research Councils. DERA's main relationship with the Research Councils arises through the operation of the Joint Grants Scheme, JGS, whereby the Ministry of Defence part funds research which has some direct defence relevance.

No decisions have been made on the form of a public private partnership, PPP, for DERA, and it is too early to speculate on the precise form it would take. Whatever the form, the importance of maintaining effective relationships with the Research Councils will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under his public private partnership proposals for DERA, if DERA will lose Crown immunity. [89198]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: No decisions have been made on the nature of a public private partnership, PPP, for DERA, and it is too early to speculate on the precise form it would take. The MOD study team is supported by legal experts who provide advice on a range of legal and commercial issues which may affect the PPP. This includes the subject of Crown immunity. While further analysis would be required during the implementation phase, the basic premise is that Crown immunity would cease to apply in the event that assets, facilities and employees were transferred out of the direct control of the Crown.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under his public private partnership proposals for DERA, if liability for insurance cover against catastrophic accident will be transferred to private sector partners from his Department. [89199]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: No decisions have been made on the nature of a public private partnership, PPP, for DERA, and it is too early to speculate on the precise form it would take. However, the apportionment of risk between a PPP DERA and the MOD, including the handling of liability for catastrophic accident, is an important issue. During the implementation phase, these and other legal and commercial considerations will be addressed in detail by the MOD study team and their advisers, in consultation with DERA and key stakeholders.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under his Public Private Partnership proposals for DERA, if Boscombe Down airfield will be upgraded to civil airfield standards; and at what cost. [89200]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: No decisions have been made on the nature of a Public Private Partnership, PPP, for DERA, and it is too early to speculate on the precise form it would take. In the proposal outlined in the consultation document, the aircraft test and evaluation activities at Boscombe Down would form part of the PPP, operating in the private sector, with implications for the licensing of the airfield. Further work would be required on the detailed aspects of this during implementation.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the terms of risk analyses and the risk assessments carried out on his proposals for a Public Private Partnership for DERA. [89201]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The study team's primary objective was to find a long term value for money solution for the future of DERA which would provide MOD with the scientific services it will continue to need. These were defined by the "MOD Customer Needs Statement" as laid down in Figure 1 of the Consultation Document. These are being used as option evaluation criteria in the study, to identify both the benefits and risks of each option. Risks to achievement of financial objectives and compatibility with wider MOD and UK interests are also being addressed.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposals for a Public Private Partnership for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency on his smart procurement initiative; and if he will make a statement. [89203]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: Throughout the DERA PPP study, the MOD study team has had frequent discussions with the Department of Trade and Industry and UK industry as well as the MOD Smart Procurement Initiative implementation team, to ensure that the DERA PPP and Smart Procurement projects complement one another.

Our consultation process, announced on 5 May 1999, Official Report, columns 384–85, has included significant debate with industry over the way a DERA PPP would function in the Smart Procurement environment. We have had many constructive responses and discussions. Although it is too early to summarise the outcome of the consultation, these views will be reflected in the study team's final recommendation, along with a view on how DERA will operate with the Smart Procurement Initiative.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is conducting a full economic appraisal of the proposals for the DERA public private partnership; and if he will place the results of his appraisal in the Library. [89027]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 29 June 1999]: During the DERA PPP options study, the MOD study team paid much attention to assessing the long term financial benefits of each option. However, in choosing between options, the evaluation process addressed not just financial issues, but also each option's ability to deliver top quality scientific and technical capability to meet future defence needs and to complement wider MOD and Government policy. There is no specific stand-alone economic appraisal suitable for the Library.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce a decision on the DERA public private partnership proposals before the summer recess. [89029]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 29 June 1999]: Our formal consultation period is now drawing to a close and the study team is analysing the responses received. The consultation process has highlighted the complexity of some of the issues involved, and, on the recommendation of the study team, we have agreed that further analysis and discussions with key stakeholder groups are required. We do not expect a final recommendation from the team before the summer recess.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location and size of common land owned by DERA. [89196]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir John Chisholm to Mr. Robert Key, dated 6 July 1999:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your question about the location and size of common land owned by DERA.

I am afraid that we do not hold this information ourselves, nor is it held centrally by Defence Estates (DE). The official Register of Common Land is kept by the County Councils or Unitary Authorities. Copy title deeds are actually held at 8 regional DE offices and the Head Office. Enquiries to the regional offices have not identified common land within the estate vested in DERA, though this preliminary search cannot be considered exhaustive.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is (a) the current asset value of and (b) the revenue stream derived in the last financial year from, the intellectual property rights of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. [89204]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir John Chisholm to Mr. Robert Key, dated 6 July 1999:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your questions about intellectual property rights.

You asked for the current asset value of the intellectual property rights of DERA. Prediction of intellectual property is unreliable due to uncertainty over the industrial implementation of inventions and the arrival of competing technologies as well as general economic uncertainty. Because of these sources of uncertainty, the Agency has reviewed its accounting policies in the context of recent changes in the guidance on best practice and no longer allocates a capital value to its intellectual property.

Accordingly, the balance sheet for the year ending 31 March 1999 shows a zero value for intangible fixed assets (effectively intellectual property). This is, of course, an accounting convention and does not reflect the open market value of DERA's intellectual property which cannot be precisely defined except by an actual sale following a process of due diligence by prospective buyers.

Your second question asked about the revenue stream derived in the last financial year for the intellectual property rights of DERA. The financial statements for the year ending 31 March 1999 are currently being finalised but we expect to report non-Exchequer royalty income in the order of £6M.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Eurofighter

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Eurofighters are being purchased for the RAF and at what cost; and how many are being purchased by other NATO countries. [88961]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 29 June 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 6 July 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of Eurofighters being purchased for the RAF and by other NATO countries and the cost to the UK. The matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The 4 Eurofighter Partner Nations are procuring 620 aircraft: 232 for the UK; 180 for Germany; 121 for Italy and 87 for Spain. Production contracts for the first tranche of 148 aircraft, 55 of which are for the UK, were placed in September 1998.

The total procurement cost of the Eurofighter programme to the UK is estimated at £16.1 Billion at current prices.

Porton Down (Animal Procedures)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many project licence applications for animal procedures at Porton Down have been (a) approved unamended for submission to the Home Office, (b) approved in amended form for submission to the Home Office and (c) rejected for each month since 1 January 1997. [89451]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 6 July 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about the number of applications for project licences to conduct research involving work with animals, which have been submitted to the Home Office from Porton Down since January 1997.

The Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down has operated both an internal consultative process and ethical review process for several years, although the latter was only an official requirement by the Home Office from January 1999.

The operation of a preliminary internal consultation process and ethical review means all of the project licence applications are modified, amended and refined prior to application to the Home Office. However, during this period no application was totally rejected and none required resubmission to the ethical review. The numbers of project licence applications processed internally and submitted to the Home Office since January 1997 are shown in the table below.

Number of project licence applications processed

Month	Year 1997	1998	1999
January	0	0	1
February	2	1	0
June	1	1	1
July	0	2	—
August	2	0	—
September	0	0	—
October	1	0	—
November	0	1	—
December	0	0	—

I hope that you find this information helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals have been bred for use in experiments at Porton Down in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and how many of each year's total were subsequently killed without being so used. [89453]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 6 July 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the numbers of animals bred at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down for use in research and the numbers culled without use.

These numbers for the financial years 1997–1998 and 1998–1999 are given in the table below.

Species of animal bred	1997–98	1998–99
Mice
Weaned	5,656	3,232
Surplus cull	4,468	2,603
Rats
Weaned	7,235	4,555
Surplus cull	4,055	3,851
Marmosets
Rhesus
Weaned	42	46
Pigs
Weaned	44	85
Market sales	18	7

In 1998–99, 2,375 of the culled mice and 3,080 of the culled rats were given to two local bird sanctuaries.

I hope that this information answers your question.

Antonov 124

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Antonov 124, with a military aircraft release certificate, would meet his Department's required in-service date of 2001 under the Strategic Short-Term Airlift Programme. [88313]

Mr. Spellar: The five tenders received for the Short Term Strategic Airlift programme are currently being assessed by DPA officials against the authorised Staff Requirement, which includes the in-service date of 2001. Owing to the commercial confidentiality of the tenders and assessment process, I am withholding the information that my hon. Friend seeks under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

PRIME MINISTER

Biotechnology

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if the studies of the consequences of developments in biotechnology to be undertaken by the OECD on behalf of the G8 will be published; [88085]

(2) pursuant to his oral statement of 21 June 1999 on the G8 summit, Official Report, columns 761–64, if he will ensure that the terms of reference of the studies on the consequences of developments in biotechnology, to be undertaken by committees of the OECD and reported to next year's summit, are placed in the Library. [88094]

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to ensuring an open and informed debate on biotechnology both within the United Kingdom and internationally. I firmly endorse the G8 conclusions inviting the OECD to carry out studies in this area, and we are currently discussing with G8 partners and the OECD the detailed arrangements under which these can best be taken forward.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the total cost, including travel and accommodation, of each occasion when a special adviser of the Chief Whip and Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury has travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997, whether accompanied by a Minister or not, indicating the place visited. [89047]

The Prime Minister: The two Special Advisers to the then Chief Whip visited the European Parliament in Brussels in September 1997. The cost of flights and accommodation was £300 each.

Following a request from the South African Parliament, one Special Adviser was a member of a party, which included the Principal Clerk, Select Committees in the House of Commons and other officials who visited South Africa to assist the Parliamentary Administration to prepare for the new induction of MPs following the national elections on 2 June. This was funded from the development assistance programme of the Department for International Development. The cost attributed to the Special Adviser's flight was £2,334. Subsistence was paid at a rate of £72 a night for the three nights of the visit.

All visits have been in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 1, on special advisers, if he will list the total cost including travel, accommodation and subsistence allowances, and place visited of each occasion that his (a) Chief of Staff and (b) Chief Press Secretary travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997, whether accompanied by him or not. [89065]

The Prime Minister: My Chief of Staff and Chief Press Secretary regularly accompany me on official overseas visits and I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 25 June 1999, Official Report, column 482–83 which accounted fully for costs of my official visits overseas, including the costs of those accompanying me. In addition, during the conflict in Kosovo, my Chief Press Secretary has visited NATO HQ in Brussels on six occasions, at the request of the NATO Secretary General and General Clark, SACEUR at an average cost of £400 per visit; and undertook a single visit to Macedonia and Kosovo at a cost of £570. Wherever possible, any accommodation needed was provided at no charge by HM Ambassador, NATO or General Clark. Normal subsistence rates for civil servants have applied.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by special advisers in his policy department for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89995]

The Prime Minister: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning with the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the party and helping to brief party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Administrations.

Intelligence Services Act

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will identify the Secretary of State referred to in Paragraph 13 of the report of the Commissioner for 1998 in respect of the Intelligence Services Act 1994. [88715]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 June 1999]: As has already been made public, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has confirmed that reference was to him and that he acted in accordance with long-standing procedures which were in place at the time.

The Commissioner's Annual Report made no criticism of any Secretary of State, but the Government will take account of advice received from the Commissioner and introduce any necessary procedural changes.

Official Histories

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the official histories held by each Government Department. [89727]

The Prime Minister: Official histories are those produced by the Cabinet Office. Since the current programme began in 1966, the following titles have been published:

Title	Author	Date published
Environmental Planning	Professor J. B. Cullingworth	1975–80
Nationalisation of British Industry	Professor Sir Norman Chester	1975
Colonial Development	D. J. Morgan	1980
External Economic Policy Vol. 1	Professor L. S. Pressnell	1987
The British Part in the Korean War	General Sir Anthony Farrar-Hockley	1990–95
The Health Services since the War	Dr. Charles Webster	1988–96

In addition a number of official histories are in preparation. These were listed in my answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 646. Both the published histories, and those in preparation, relate only to the Cabinet Office official history programme. Other Government Departments produce histories relating to their own responsibilities. No central record of these is held.

TREASURY

Fixed Penalty (Speeding)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much income the Treasury has received to date from fixed penalty fines issued as a result of speeding offences detected by speed cameras. [89381]

Mr. Milburn: This information is not held centrally. However I understand that the following Fixed Penalty Notices in respect of automatic speed detection have been issued:

Year	England and Wales (a)	Scotland (b)	Northern Ireland (c)
1993	25,767	646	n/a
1994	95,510	8,464	n/a

1997	288,622	27,145	n/a
1998	n/a	n/a	6,674
1999 (to date)	n/a	n/a	n/a

Notes:

(a) Automatic detection came into force on 1 April 1993. The penalty has been £40 since 1 April 1992.

(b) Automatic detection came into force on 1 April 1993. The penalty has been £40 since then.

(c) Mobile speed cameras came into being on 1 October 1997. The penalty has been £40 plus 3 penalty points since then.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of how much the Treasury will receive annually as a result of the climate change levy; and if the levy will be fiscally neutral within the manufacturing sector. [89568]

Ms Hewitt: The climate change levy will be introduced in April 2001 raising around £1.75 billion in its first full year. Its introduction will entail no increase in the overall burden of tax on business as the revenue will be fully recycled via a 0.5 percentage point cut in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions. Business will also benefit from an additional £50 million for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, like solar and wind power.

The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in National Insurance Contributions on individual sectors will depend on the rates at which the levy is set. The final rates of the levy will not be set until the Finance Bill 2000.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89982]

Ms Hewitt: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the party and helping to brief party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

Financial Services Authority

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the annual report of the Financial Services Authority to be published. [90168]

Ms Hewitt: A copy of the Board's report was laid before Parliament today. It includes a report, pursuant to Section 1(3) of the Banking Act 1987 on the exercise of the Authority's functions under that Act, during the 13 month period to 31 March 1999. It also includes the report made by the FSA under section 117 of the Financial Services Act 1986, covering the period 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

A130 Bypass Scheme

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the local authority transport schemes which were considered for PFI when the A130 bypass scheme was approved. [88589]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following local authority transport schemes were being considered last autumn along with the A130 bypass project:

Baldock Bypass

Bristol/South Gloucestershire Rapid Transit

Doncaster North Bridge

East Leeds Radial

Manchester Metrolink Extensions

North Yorkshire PFI

Northumberland County Council Street Lighting

Nottingham Express Transit

South Hampshire Rapid Transit

Surrey Cross Thames Integrated Transport Corridor

Tyne and Wear Metro Extension

Walsall Integrated Transport Project

Walsall Street Lighting

Weymouth Transportation and Regeneration Project.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the criteria by which the different schemes were judged when the PFI Scheme for the A130 bypass was approved; and how each scheme scored against the criteria. [88735]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The A130 bypass PFI project and the other local road schemes considered for PFI funding last autumn were appraised using the New Approach to Appraisal developed during the Roads Review. The Appraisal Summary Table for the A130 was placed in the Library, as specified on 19 May 1999, Official Report, column 354. As the other schemes considered at the time were not progressed and are subject to further evaluation by the local authorities concerned, Appraisal Summary Tables for these have not been published.

Environment Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the outcome of the Environment Council held in Luxembourg on 24–25 June; and if he will make a statement. [89125]

Mr. Meacher: The meeting of the Environment Council on 24–25 June reached political agreement on common positions for seven proposals which will now go forward to the European Parliament for a second reading. The Council also reached conclusions on several other matters.

Political agreement was reached on the proposal to amend Directive 90/220 on the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms. This amendment provides improved risk assessment procedures which will now include an assessment of direct, indirect, immediate or delayed effect of GMOs. The agreement introduces a post-market monitoring regime, recognition of the precautionary principle, and recourse to a Commission committee on questions of a general ethical nature. It also includes a more comprehensive labelling regime for GMOs. The Commission's review of the Directive in 2003 will include an assessment of whether sufficient experience has been gained to consider differentiated procedures for marketing release. Of key importance, the voice of member states will be strengthened in the Commission chaired regulatory committee responsible for resolving objections lodged by one or more member states (referred to as the comitology procedure). GMOs subject to authorisation under other EU product legislation will be exempted from authorisation under amended Directive 90/220 only where the relevant product legislation provides for equivalent risk assessment requirements to those in the amended Directive. Likewise, such exemptions will apply only where equivalent safeguarding provisions to those in Directive 90/220 apply. These allow member states to take unilateral emergency action in the event of new evidence of risk. The text provides for the identification and phasing out of antibiotic marker genes which are harmful to human health and the environment. It provides for first time consent to be time-limited to a period of up to ten years. In addition, the text provides clear timetables for the taking of decisions on marketing of GMOs; this will make it easier for industry to invest and plan. The UK made a statement for the minutes calling on the Commission to consider, as a matter of priority, the feasibility of a liability regime to cover the release and marketing of GMOs.

The Council reached agreement on a proposal for a directive to minimise adverse environmental effects from the incineration of waste. The agreement will extend EU controls to virtually all waste incineration plants, update the requirements of the 1989 municipal waste incineration directives and, by merging them with the 1994 Hazardous Waste Incineration Directive, consolidate incineration controls into a single piece of legislation. It sets stringent minimum emission limit values for a range of substances emitted from incineration and co-incineration processes, including a 10 fold tightening of the dioxins limit currently set by the Environment Agency.

Agreement was also reached on a proposal concerning noise from outdoor machinery which will set noise labelling requirements for 57 types of machinery and noise limits for 22 of these. A further agreement will set controls for the first time on diesel exhausts for agricultural and forestry tractors and set emission limits in line with those already agreed for non-road mobile machinery.

The regulation governing the EU's funding programme for projects which improve environmental quality, known as the LIFE programme, has also been updated, and agreement was reached on a budget of 613 million euros over the next 5 years.

Revisions to two voluntary schemes were also agreed. Political agreement was reached on a revised EU ecolabelling regulation, governing the scheme which enables products to display the EU eco label symbol if they meet agreed environmental criteria. The UK made a statement for the minutes recording disappointment that it had not been possible to agree better arrangements for promoting convergence between the EU ecolabelling scheme and various national labelling schemes which will continue to run alongside it. Political agreement was also reached on a revised regulation to govern the EU eco-management and audit scheme (EMAS), which gives recognition to companies and organisations with good systems for environmental management and reporting.

Council deferred a decision on a common position on the draft end of life vehicles directive which should now be decided under the Finnish Presidency.

The Council agreed conclusions on EU Chemicals policy, as part of a process begun at the informal Environment Council at Chester under the UK Presidency; on negotiations with Japanese and Korean car manufacturers concerning a voluntary reduction in carbon dioxide emissions from new passenger cars; on the Convention on Biological Diversity; on the proposed Biosafety Protocol; and on the environmental situation in the former Republic of Yugoslavia.

The Council held a policy debate on a proposal for directive on the environmental assessment of plans and programmes and noted presentations from the Commission on the integration of the environment into the internal market and on the implementation of the Kyoto protocol on climate change.

London Underground

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received concerning current disruptions on the Circle and District London Underground lines. [89138]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As of 1 July 1999, my Department has received letters from four members of the public on the recent disruptions on the Circle and District lines. We have also received questions from four hon. Members, including the hon. Gentleman.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will make public the report into the London Underground penalty fares scheme; and if he will make a statement. [90252]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have today placed a copy of the review in the Library.

The operation of the penalty fares scheme on London Underground is the statutory responsibility of London Transport in accordance with powers under the London Regional Transport (Penalty Fares) Act 1992.

Leaded Fuel

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to (a) advise consumers of the removal of leaded fuel from the market and (b) assist owners of cars where conversion is uneconomic to dispose of their vehicles appropriately or support their continued use. [89083]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since December 1998 over 3.5 million leaflets have been made available to inform motorists using leaded fuel that they will have several alternatives available to ensure that they can continue to use their cars after the general removal of leaded fuel from the market by 1 January 2000. The Government will shortly be launching a further publicity campaign to reinforce this message. Information leaflets are already being provided with Vehicle Excise Duty payment reminders and these will be followed by advertisements in the national press and the provision of further information leaflets at MOT garages and at filling stations. Information will also be available on the DETR site on the internet.

Most cars will be able to run on lead replacement petrol (LRP) without adjustment to their engines. LRP will become widely available at pumps from the autumn with a duty rate set by the Chancellor some 3.67p per litre lower than that of leaded petrol. Alternatively, where LRP is not available, motorists will be able to buy special additives in bottles or syringe-like applicators for use with the grade of unleaded petrol (super or premium) recommended by the vehicle manufacturer.

Many cars could alternatively be switched to ordinary unleaded petrol, with no alteration to the engine or with only a simple adjustment to the ignition timing, the cost of which could be recovered through lower fuel costs. In a relatively few cases where motorists often use their cars for prolonged heavy motorway driving or for towing they may find they need to have their engines modified. However, the vast majority of cars will not need this extreme modification and independent advice should be obtained before deciding whether this is necessary.

Refrigerants

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the environmental costs and benefits of alternative refrigerant gases in the next generation of installed equipment; and if he will make a statement; [89254]

(2) what assessment he has made of the projected impact of the use of HFCs as refrigerant gases on the United Kingdom's target for reduction of greenhouse gas emissions; and if he will make a statement. [89256]

Mr. Meale: My Department has carried out several assessments of alternatives to the use of ozone depleting substances such as CFCs. Alternatives to CFC refrigerants include HFCs, which are potent greenhouse gases, ammonia and hydrocarbons. While ammonia and hydrocarbons benefit from not being greenhouse gases, they are either toxic or highly flammable. Nevertheless, in suitably designed systems, they may be used for many refrigeration applications. Energy efficiency is an important factor in determining overall greenhouse gas emissions from the use of refrigeration systems, and is generally comparable for well designed systems using HFCs, ammonia or hydrocarbons as refrigerants.

Emissions of HFCs used as refrigerant gases were 0.2 million tonnes of carbon-equivalent in 1995 and are currently projected to rise to 1.3 million tonnes of carbon-equivalent in 2010. This increase in emissions is equivalent to 0.5 per cent. of total UK emissions of the basket of six greenhouse gases in 1990. These projections assume the increased use of alternative refrigerants in some applications. The Government are developing a UK climate change programme which will address both their legally binding target of 12.5 per cent. reduction in overall greenhouse gas emissions by 2008–12, and the domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in CO_2 emissions.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to encourage the use of non-HFC refrigerants inside Government buildings; and if he will make a statement. [90061]

Mr. Meale: My Department issued a model improvement statement for greening government operations in May 1998. Since then Government departments have been adopting and adapting the model to meet their own special circumstances and develop further their environmental strategies. Among other things, the model statement promotes switching from HFCs to environmentally preferable substitutes having a low or zero global warming potential. Advice on suitable alternatives is given in DETR's "Green Guide for Buyers" and other guidance which can be found on our website.

Air Passengers

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each airport in the United Kingdom the percentage increase in passenger volume for the last year for which figures are available. [89385]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The most recent year for which Civil Aviation Authority data are available is 1998. The absolute and percentage increases in 1998 over 1997 for each UK airport are listed.

[1] Sheffield City began reporting June 1997

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of passengers from (a) the UK and (b) the Yorkshire and Humberside Region flying to destinations (i) in the USA, (ii) in Europe and (iii) elsewhere in (1) 1978, (2) 1988 and (3) 1998. [89390]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Estimates of passengers originating in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and travelling to the United States, Europe and elsewhere are not regularly produced by the Civil Aviation Authority. Estimates of passengers flying from airports in the Yorkshire and Humberside region, which are Leeds, Bradford and Humberside, to these destinations are available. Data for 1978, 1988 and 1998 are listed in the table.

Estimates are also made by the Civil Aviation Authority of the total number of UK passengers originating in the Yorkshire and Humberside region flying from UK airports on international services. These data are not disaggregated by destination and are available only for selected years. Figures for 1987 and 1997 are listed in the table.

A36 (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will (a) impose a 12 tonne weight limit on the A36(T) between Wylye and Salisbury, (b) erect signage to divert traffic from that route to the A303 and A360 between Wylye and Salisbury via Long Barrow roundabout, (c) detrunk and (d) declassify that road. [89190]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 1 July 1999]: We are currently undertaking a detailed study of the potential options available to help solve the transport problems of Salisbury and the surrounding area. As the A36 forms an integral part of the highway network of the study area, the problems associated with it are being considered as part of the overall study. The results should be available in the Autumn and will be the subject of public consultation. It is too early to comment on what solutions may be proposed but weight limits and diversions are among the many options being considered for the Salisbury area. A final decision on the classification of the A36 will be taken after a further study, as announced by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 7 April.

Domestic Electrical Systems

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulations exist to ensure the correct fitting of electrical systems and circuits in homes; and if he will make a statement. [89598]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 2 July 1999]: There are no such existing regulations. My Department is considering the merits of extending the Building Regulations to cover this.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what timetable the Government have for the introduction of the direct high-speed access to the Channel Tunnel from York; and if he will make a statement. [90084]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 340–41, the commissioning of a thorough and independent review of regional Eurostar services. On 17 June the consultancy firm Arthur D. Little were appointed to undertake this review, and it is underway. The review, which will include an assessment of possible York services, will be thorough and wide ranging in its consideration of alternative options. It will, in particular, seek to assess the regional economic and social benefits of regional Eurostar services, and will examine the proposals put forward by the Virgin Group and the report produced last year by Inter-Capital and Regional Rail Ltd. The final report is due to be submitted at the end of October, and we expect to make a statement to the House before the end of the year.

English Partnerships

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the square footage is of the English Partnerships' offices in Cockermouth. [88755]

Mr. Meale: English Partnership offices in Cockermouth were transferred to the North West Development Agency on 1 April 1999. I understand from the Agency that the net lettable area of the office is 5,135 square feet.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what proposals the North West Development Agency has for the future of the English Partnerships' offices in Cockermouth; [88752]

(2) what arrangements are being made for the sale or rental of the English Partnerships' offices in Cockermouth. [88762]

Mr. Meale: Issues relating to office accommodation are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand that once the Agency has confirmed a vacation date, the Cockermouth Offices will be marked as 'available to let'.

In the longer term, once the development is fully let, consideration will be given to its disposal on the open market.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the annual rental costs are of the premises to be occupied by (a) English Partnerships and (b) the Rural Development Commission at Penrith. [88756]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on accommodation are for the North West Development Agency. I understand from the Agency that no final decision has been made on the location of the Penrith office. The annual rental costs of the likely premises to be occupied by the RDA staff (including former EP and RDC staff) are still under negotiation. However, I understand that the rental cost may be in the order of £10 per square foot.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the staff complement was at the English Partnerships office in Cockermouth in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998 and (d) 1999; and what the proposed complement of staff at English Partnerships' new offices at Penrith is for the first three years following relocation from Cockermouth. [88751]

Mr. Meale: I understand that English Partnerships' staff complements in Cockermouth were (a) 1996—14, (b) 1997—14 (c) 1998—11 and (d) 1999—11; and that the proposed complement of staff at the North West Development Agency's offices in Penrith is 18 to 20 people.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Building Research Establishment Environmental Assessment Standard's Excellent Standard will apply to the offices which will be occupied by English Partnerships and other North West Development Agency operations at Penrith. [88757]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on accommodation are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand that in conducting the negotiations for the Penrith office the Agency has told the construction firm that they are looking for a Building Research Establishment Environmental Assessment Standard's Excellent Standard (BREAM). The Cockermouth office has no BREAM rating.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the schemes for which funding had been approved by English Partnerships but not legally committed and which are the subject of funding reappraisal following the commencement of the operation of the North West Development Agency. [88766]

Mr. Meale: There were no such schemes outstanding at the commencement of the North West Development Agency.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are (a) the nature of the title and (b) the annual running costs of the English Partnerships offices in Cockermouth. [88753]

Mr. Meale: Issues relating to accommodation are for the North West Development Agency. I understand from the Agency that the office at Cockermouth is held on freehold. The total running costs for the financial year 1998–99 were £513,735 for office related costs, including salaries, and £352,797 for estate related costs in connection with the Agency's portfolio of land and buildings in Cumbria. (Physical work on the 375 units comprising 845,000 sq. ft. across Cumbria).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the budget for English Partnerships in each year since 1994; and what are the proposed budgets for the next three years. [88759]

Mr. Meale: Details of English Partnerships' total income and expenditure up to 1997–98 are given in their Annual Reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

The information on grant-in-aid provided by my Department is:

EP and Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) will be co-operating closely on PIP projects. Full details given in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens North (Mr. Watts) on 21 April 1999, Official Report, columns 545–46.
[4] Although no grant-in-aid provision has been Voted by Parliament for 2000–01 and 2001–02, the table shows Government's spending plans for English Partnerships announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review. This will be divided between EP and the RDAs.
[5] Provision
[6] Planned

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the maximum number of staff it is possible to accommodate in the English Partnerships offices in Cockermouth; and if the proposed personnel requirements of English Partnerships' and the Rural Development Commission in Cumbria could be accommodated there. [88754]

Mr. Meale: Decisions about office accommodation are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand from the Agency that it estimates that up to 20 staff could be accommodated in the Cockermouth offices. The offices are of sufficient size to accommodate the Agency's Cumbria Area Office.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of (a) the change in the amount of excess mileage allowances arising out of the transfer of persons currently working at the English Partnerships office in Cockermouth to offices in Penrith and (b) the costs of excess mileage allowance if persons currently working for the RDC in Penrith had been required to travel to the Cockermouth offices of English Partnerships; [88764]

(2) what estimate has been made of the change in the costs in travelling time and mileage allowances in servicing West Cumbria following the move of English Partnerships' operations from Cockermouth to Penrith. [88769]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on location are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand from the Agency that the cost of travelling time and mileage, including excess mileage costs for staff required to change their location, were among the factors taken into account in the decision in principle to locate the Agency's Area Office in Penrith. However, the costs are impossible to estimate with any confidence because the staff concerned will often travel to appointments direct from home. The Area Office will service the whole of Cumbria; some journeys will be shorter and others longer depending on the destination for appointments.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions from which year's budget the additional costs of the location of English Partnerships' in Penrith will be funded. [88760]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on location are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand from the Agency that its relocation may take place towards the end of this financial year, in which case the cost may be met in part this year and in part next year.

My Department will not be providing additional funding for the relocation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment has been made of the costs of complying with TUPE arising out of the transfer of staff from the Cockermouth offices of English Partnerships to a new location at Penrith. [88765]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on location are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand that costs associated with the transfer of staff have been fully taken into account when value for money aspects of the potential move were being considered by the Agency.

North West Development Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation took place prior to the appointment of the membership of the North West Development Agency. [88749]

Mr. Meale: Candidates for the Boards of the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) were sought from as wide a field as possible. Three main approaches were taken to identify candidates: RDAs were included alongside other Non Departmental Public Bodies in a general advertisement for Board Members; the databases of the Public Appointments Unit, DETR and other government departments were searched for suitable candidates; and a large number of regional and national stakeholders were invited to offer nominations.

I have placed in the Library a list showing the regional stakeholders who were invited to nominate members for the North West Development Agency.

Candidates encouraged to apply by stakeholders were considered alongside applicants from other sources. Information on which stakeholder, if any, nominated those appointed to the Boards was not recorded separately.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the financial implications for the Exchequer are arising out of the movement from Mercury Court of the North West Development Agency's premises in Liverpool. [88761]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on location are a matter for the North West Development Agency. The movement of some staff from Mercury Court to alternative premises, including area offices, is still being negotiated. However, any net increase in cost which may arise will be contained within the Agency's overall budget. There will therefore be no direct financial implications for the Exchequer.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation took place and with which organisations and individuals prior to the North West Development Agency's decision to close the Cockermouth Office of English Partnerships. [88750]

Mr. Meale: Decisions on location are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand that, in deciding in principle to locate its Area office in Penrith, the Agency took account of a range of factors.

The Board reached a decision to locate the Area Office and Headquarters on the M6/West Coast Main Line (in respect of Cumbria and Lancashire); at the interchange of the M6/M62 and West Coast Main Line (Warrington Headquarters and Cheshire Area office) and on the M62/East West Rail Line (Liverpool and Manchester). The Penrith decision flowed from the application of these criteria—particularly the need to have public transport access via rail. There was no general consultation on this specific decision.

Road Use Levies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to ensure that levies on (a) road use and (b) workplace parking schemes will not unfairly penalise car ownership by vulnerable groups. [89457]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government's proposals on road user charging and the workplace parking levy will not penalise car ownership, but will tackle congestion and other problems caused by car use in certain circumstances. The Government are keen to ensure that the needs of vulnerable groups are considered when charging schemes are introduced. The Secretary of State will take all relevant impacts into account when considering proposed local authority schemes for approval.

Road Accidents

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress towards achieving the national targets for reducing the number of deaths and serious injuries resulting from road accidents in the United Kingdom. [89710]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1987, a target was set to reduce the numbers of deaths and injuries from road accidents in Great Britain by one third by the year 2000, compared with the average for 1981–85.

The target has been exceeded for both road fatalities and serious injuries. By 1998, fatalities were 39 per cent. below baseline and serious injuries were 45 per cent. below. Compared with 1997, there was a fall of 5 per cent. for both deaths and serious injuries.

This substantial reduction in road casualties is to be welcomed, but there is no room for complacency. We are working on a new casualty reduction target for 2010, and a road safety strategy, which we are aiming to publish in the Autumn.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what it will cost the Countryside Agency to occupy the property at Penrith formerly occupied by the Rural Development Commission. [88763]

Mr. Meale: The rent payable by the Countryside Agency is £6,763 a year, which includes service charges and utility costs. In addition, the Agency incurred one-off costs of about £4,500 on minor refurbishment works, including the installation of computer cabling.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gene Patents

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to restrict the exercise of monopoly power under gene patents. [87371]

Mr. Battle: Rights available to patent owners, including those relating to genetic engineering, offer encouragement to undertake the costs and risks of technical innovation, but are already limited in their scope and duration in order that others can gain access to patented inventions and the technical knowledge on which they are based. There are no plans for change.

As for all technologies, patent rights in the genetics field can last for a maximum period of 20 years after which the invention becomes part of the public domain and all are free to use it. There are exceptions to rights allowing the use of a patented invention to undertake research relating to that invention. If the market for an invention is not being satisfied in the UK, then rights may be compulsorily licensed to others. It is also important to note that patented inventions are published in sufficient detail to allow others skilled in the technology to use them. This ensures that technical advances are disclosed so stimulating research for further inventions, and rights may be challenged more easily since their foundation is made available for all to see. These restrictions are consistent with European and International laws concerning patentability.

In addition to these restrictions on patent rights, in the event that a patented invention places the rights owner in a dominant market position, exercise of patent rights is subject to competition law.

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88478]

Mr. Wilson: I have nothing further to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 18 June 1999, Official Report, column 255.

Civil Servants (Secondments)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number and grade of civil servants seconded to work in the (a) textile and (b) aerospace industries for each year since 1992. [89549]

Mr. Battle: The Department does not keep comprehensive historical records of secondments. From the information that is available the details requested are:

Company	Grade	Period of secondment
Aerospace Industries
British Aerospace	R10 (formerly Grade 7)	November 1994–February 1995

Faith Charnock Wilson	R8	June 1997 (2 weeks)
John Partridge Illingworth Drummonds Paul James Knitwear	R6	4 x 1-day attachments

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89169]

Mr. Byers: This question cannot be answered without incurring disproportionate cost.

Inward Investment

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the levels of inward investment into (i) the South East Government Office Region, (ii) the West Midlands Government Office Region and (iii) the Yorkshire and the Humber Government Office Region for the last five years for which figures are available. [89384]

Mr. Wills: The figures in the table are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest in the UK. They are based on the companies' best estimates, at that time, of the number of jobs to be created/safeguarded by the investment in its first three years.

There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice. Comprehensive capital expenditure details are often not available at the time of the decision to invest, and are therefore not included.

Biotechnology

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are currently employed in the medical and pharmaceutical applications of biotechnology in the United Kingdom; and what has been the annual financial contribution of this area of biotechnology to the United Kingdom's gross domestic product from 1992 to date in actual terms and in terms of a percentage of gross domestic product. [89715]

Mr. Battle: This information is not available from official statistics.

Kosovo

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the potential for incorporating renewable energy sources in the rebuilding works in Kosovo. [89919]

Mr. Battle: During my brief visit to Kosovo on 28 and 29 June heading the Taskforce it was clear that rehabilitation of the power sector was urgently required. However, it is too early to assess the extent to which the potential exists to incorporate renewable energy resources in the refurbishment of Kosovo's power generation capacity; this will have to await more detailed assessment studies of all aspects of the power sector.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for stimulating the availability of finance for SMEs through the regional venture capital funds element of the Enterprise Fund. [89955]

Mr. Byers: I have today published a consultation paper, "Addressing the SME Equity Gap—Support for Regional Venture Capital Funds" which sets out our proposals and seeks views on the design and form of the support for the Regional Venture Capital element of the Enterprise Fund. Depending on the results of the consultation, I will be making up to £50 million available over the next three years to support the creation of Regional Venture Capital Funds. I expect this to lever in significant amounts of matching private sector finance.

The intention of our support is to provide a model which regional partnerships, working with Regional Development Agencies, can use to stimulate venture capital funds to address the equity gap. The purpose of this intervention is to increase the amount of equity finance available to growing SMEs to enable them to compete in a global economy and ensure that each region in England has access to a viable, regionally based venture capital fund. Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland already have in place mechanisms for venture capital support.

The Government are seeking views from entrepreneurs, representatives of Small Firms, the venture capital and finance industries, Regional Development Agencies and business support organisations.

Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Library. I look forward to receiving comments from those interested by 30 September.

Milk Marque

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the MMC report on the Supply in Great Britain of raw cows' milk. [90250]

Mr. Byers: I have today published the MMC report on the supply in Great Britain of raw cows' milk.

I am requiring major changes to the conditions of sale of raw milk by the dominant supplier, Milk Marque, to prevent it from exploiting its monopoly position, but have rejected the MMC recommendation to enforce a break-up of Milk Marque.

The MMC have found that Milk Marque, which was responsible for nearly half of the raw milk sales in Great Britain in 1997–98, is exploiting its monopoly in the supply of raw milk, using a variety of practices which raise the price of raw milk. Consumers pay more for fresh milk than they should, and the competitiveness of the dairy processing sector is being damaged.

This is a thorough and detailed examination of Milk Marque's selling practices and their effects, and I accept the Commission's findings.

With regard to the remedies necessary to stop these damaging effects, the MMC have explored the possibilities of either reforming Milk Marque's auction sales system, or of restructuring of Milk Marque into several independent producer bodies. Both of these options present difficulties, as the MMC recognises.

The MMC recommends the restructuring of Milk Marque, by dividing it into independent and competing quota-holding bodies, able to sell their milk on an ordinary commercial basis and to engage in milk processing, that is the making of milk products, if they wish. I have not accepted this recommendation.

An imposed restructuring of Milk Marque would be a drastic step which would affect a large proportion of the farmers of England and Wales. I am also conscious that this remedy would take a considerable time to put fully into effect: perhaps as long as two years. This would itself introduce worrying uncertainties for the industry. There is a strong possibility that by the end of the period the market may have changed considerably. I believe a wider debate about the future of Milk Marque is appropriate, informed by the analysis provided by the MMC report.

In the meantime the raw milk market must continue to function, and it must do so on as fair a basis as possible. The report found that Milk Marque has been able to exploit its position by using its selling system to price discriminate and control the supply of milk available to the market. It is clear that Milk Marque must reform its sales procedures. I am therefore asking the Director General of Fair Trading to consider and advise me by the end of this year what changes should be made, after consulting with Milk Marque and its customers.

Milk Marque will be aware that from 1 March next year it will be subject to the prohibitions on anti-competitive behaviour and abuse of market power introduced under the Competition Act 1998. The DGFT will have interim relief powers to stop behaviour which is damaging third parties.

The MMC also recommends (paragraph 2.400 of the report) a number of interim remedies to prevent Milk Marque abusing its market power. I accept these recommendations.

I am aware that, in its recent auctions, Milk Marque has relied increasingly on sales on undisclosed contract terms to dispose of its milk. The undertakings I am seeking will apply to both auction and private sales.

The MMC have concluded that Milk Marque's planned increase in its milk processing capacity may be expected to operate against the public interest, by enhancing its ability to exploit its monopoly power.

Milk Marque, while it remains a monopoly supplier of raw milk to the processing sector, should not be allowed to extend its milk processing activities in this way. I am therefore also asking the Director General to seek undertakings from Milk Marque that it will not take any further steps towards making or carrying out any agreement to acquire or build processing plant without prior agreement by the Director General, as the MMC have recommended.

Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress made through negotiated agreements with energy intensive industries as part of the climate change levy to improve energy efficiency; and what measures his Department is taking to safeguard the international competitiveness of manufacturing firms in the United Kingdom. [89458]

Mr. Battle: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) is leading for the Government on the development of negotiated agreement with a number of energy intensive sectors. We have said that significantly reduced rates of the climate change levy will be available to those energy intensive sectors which enter negotiated agreements with the Government to deliver targets covering energy efficiency improvements and/or cuts in greenhouse gas emissions. The eligible sectors are those covered by the Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control regulations (IPPC). Negotiations are under way between DETR officials, with some assistance from DTI, and the sectors concerned. DETR initiated discussions with an initial group of the nine main energy intensive sectors following the budget, and is also now holding meetings with around twenty further sectors. The negotiations are progressing in a constructive manner. The aim is to have negotiated heads of agreement with proposed targets by the autumn, when the levels of discounts from the levy will be determined, taking account of the stringency of the targets offered.

The Government have previously stated that they aim to avoid taking action on climate change which damages business competitiveness. In this context, I welcome the intention to recycle revenues from the climate change levy, primarily via reduced employers National Insurance Contributions, and also the promised support for promotion of energy efficiency and new and renewable energy technologies, as well as the special arrangements proposed for intensive energy sectors. DTI is contributing to interdepartmental discussions both on the development of the levy proposal and also on the draft national climate change strategy, which is intended for publication later this year for consultation, and which will set the broader policy framework for business's response to climate change.

It is the case that the UK is not alone in having to reduce greenhouse gas emissions or in using economic instruments to do so. Since 1990, seven European countries have introduced carbon or energy taxes. On current projections, most OECDS countries will have to introduce new measures of one form or another to meet their Kyoto targets.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89994]

Mr. Byers: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the party and helping to brief party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

European Commission Communication

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place a copy of the European Commission Communications on (a) the Environment and the Internal Market and (b) Mutual Recognition in the Library. [90090]

Mr. Wilson: The Commission Communications referred to are available in the Library under the Commission references 99/263 (10 June) and 99/299 (21 June) respectively. They can also be accessed electronically via the Commission website: (www.europa.eu.int/comm/index_en.htm).

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

EU Cultural and Audiovisual Meeting

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will place in the Library a copy of the presentation on European identity given at the EU Weimar meeting on cultural and audiovisual issues; what is his policy on the issues raised; and if he will make a statement. [88464]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I will ensure that a copy of Jorge Semprun's Weimar speech is placed in the Libraries of the House. The meeting in Weimar underlined to those present the benefits which can accrue from learning the lessons of history and using culture as a means towards better mutual understanding between the peoples of Europe. Following the meeting in Weimar, the German Presidency presented a draft Council Resolution on integrating history into the European Community's cultural action. The Resolution was agreed unanimously at the Culture/Audiovisual Council in Luxembourg on 28 June, and a copy will be placed in the Libraries of the House when the final text is available.

EU Culture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the outcome of the Culture Council held in Luxembourg on 28 June; and if he will make a statement. [89289]

Mr. Chris Smith: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts represented the United Kingdom at the Culture/Audiovisual Council held in Luxembourg on 28 June. The Council agreed a Common Position on the Culture 2000 funding programme. A Council Resolution on integrating history into the Community's cultural action was agreed, as was a decision on the appointment by the Council of the members of the selection panel for the Community action concerning the European Capital of Culture. There was an exchange of views on the cultural dimension of the Kosovo conflict. On audiovisual matters, Council conclusions on convergence and self-regulation in the media were agreed.

Television Licence Fee Evasion

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many offences of television licence fee evasion were adjudicated upon in magistrates' courts in (a) England and (b) Wales during each of the last five years; what was the cost; what proportion of the cost was borne by (i) the magistrates' courts and (ii) the BBC; and what has been the amount of fines imposed. [89558]

Janet Anderson: The Home Office Court Proceedings database records prosecutions under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts. The great majority, but not all, of these relate to television licence fee evasion. The reporting of prosecutions where there has been no police involvement, as in this case, is known to be incomplete. Accurate information on the cost of prosecutions under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts is not available.

The number of defendants proceeded against at magistrates' courts in England and Wales for offences under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts from 1993–1997 was:

	Total proceeded against	Total convicted	Total fined	Average fine, where imposed (£)
England
1993	182,738	157,959	154,205	113
1994	180,876	156,138	152,837	94
1995[1]	122,635	106,694	103,976	99
1996	174,956	153,753	151,079	102
1997	86,088	71,600	70,341	105

	Total proceeded against	Total convicted	Total fined	Average fine, where imposed (£)
Wales
1993	12,130	10,747	10,560	95
1994	7,925	6,721	6,636	93
1995[1]	8,321	7,101	6,974	94
1996	13,162	11,103	10,913	96
1997	6,661	5,405	5,279	92

[1] In 1995, as a result of an error in data processing procedures, there was a shortfall in the recording of data for certain summary offences, including those under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts.

Libraries (Lottery Money)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how local authorities will obtain money made available through the National Lottery New Opportunities Fund to develop a public libraries IT network; and what plans he has to ensure that all public libraries will benefit from this money. [89470]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance on applications for funding for the £20m ICT training programme for librarians and the £50m programme for creation of digitised learning material will shortly be issued by the New Opportunities Fund (NOF).

Guidance on applications for funding for infrastructure development, to be delivered through NOF's £200m Community Access To Lifelong Learning Programme, is likely to be issued at the end of this year.

Millennium Prayers

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take steps to facilitate the saying of prayers at midnight on 31 December 1999 in the Millennium Dome by the Archbishop of Canterbury. [89579]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is responsible for the content and delivery of the opening celebrations at the Millennium Dome on 31 December. NMEC is discussing these arrangements with a number of interested parties including the Royal Household and Lambeth Palace, and the Government are kept fully informed of these discussions. The nature and scope of the celebrations will be announced in due course.

Preston Television Licensing Enquiry Office

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many successful prosecutions took place in the Preston Television Licensing enquiry office area for each year since 1992. [89550]

Janet Anderson: From April 1993, the Preston TV Licensing enquiry office (TVLEO) area also included Morecambe. From December 1996, the Preston TVLEO area was incorporated into TV Licensing's Northern Region; figures from 1996–97 onwards therefore relate to addresses with the PR postcode. The number of convictions for television licence evasion during the period in question was:

	Number of convictions
1992–93 (Preston TVLEO)	5,360
1993–94 (Preston TVLEO) including Morecambe	6,569
1994–95 (Preston TVLEO)	5,503
1995–96 (Preston TVLEO)	5,165
1996–97 (PR postcode)	1,058
1997–98 (PR postcode)	757
1998–99 (PR postcode)	522

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from the tourism industry calling for (a) change to and (b) hypothecation of Air Passenger Duty. [89560]

Janet Anderson: We have had a number of representations on Air Passenger Duty either calling for change to, or a hypothecation of, the duty and these have been passed to the Treasury.

Heritage Buildings

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the historic and architectural merit of surviving buildings from the British Empire Exhibition held at Wembley in 1923. [89193]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 1 July 1999]: Wembley Stadium and the Palace of Arts were added to the statutory list of buildings of special architectural or historic interest in Grade II in 1976. The other surviving buildings from the Exhibition were inspected by English Heritage in 1997, as a result of which the Palace of Industry was listed in Grade II.

Verulamium

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department is taking to safeguard archaeological remains at Verulamium; what plans English Heritage has to secure a management agreement for the site; and if he will make a statement. [89405]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 July 1999]: The site is protected as Scheduled Ancient Monument. English Heritage has commissioned a detailed survey which should provide the basis for discussions with the owners about implementing a new management plan for the site.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Council if she will propose the appointment of a select committee on young people and sport. [88499]

Mrs. Beckett: I have no plans to do so. Whilst the area is an important one, both the Culture, Media and Sport and the Education and Employment Committees are able to conduct inquiries into it.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by her special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89997]

Mrs. Beckett: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speech writing and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if her Department has funded non-Governmental organisations which have supplied out-of-date medicines to Kosovo. [89999]

Clare Short: We adhere to the World Health Organisation Guidelines on the donation of drugs, which require pharmaceutical donations to have a minimum of a year's shelf life and be provided against strict need assessment criteria. We have funded the provision of essential drugs in response to the Kosovar refugee crisis through the World Health Organisation itself and through reputable operational agencies which follow the guidelines.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what data her Department has collated on possible breaches of regulations in respect of the supply of out-of-date medicines to Kosovo by British based non-Governmental organisations in the past three months. [90000]

Clare Short: The World Health Organisation leads on the collation of data with respect to the international guidelines for the donation of drugs. They have recently reported that up to 65 per cent. of drugs donated to Albania in May have a shelf life of less than a year. Over 100 non-governmental organisations, including British based NGOs, have been active in Albania as a result of the Kosovo crisis. It is likely that many of these are not aware of, or choose not to adhere to, the WHO guidelines. We provide funding for drugs only to NGOs who adhere to the guidelines.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will hold an inquiry into the supply to Kosovar Albanians of obsolete medical supplies by non-Governmental organisations. [90001]

Clare Short: The World Health Organisation, the lead agency for medical supplies and assistance, have recently audited the provision of drugs to Albania during the refugee crisis. The results of the audit have been widely circulated. We have already made it clear that we will only fund the provision of essential drugs in response to assessed need in Kosovo and elsewhere, in line with the standards published by WHO.

European Development Fund Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the voting allocations given to the members of the European Development Fund Committee. [89372]

Clare Short: Within the European Development Fund (EDF) Committee, the votes of the member states are weighted as follows:

Member state	Votes
Austria	6
Belgium	9
Denmark	5
Finland	4
France	52
Germany	50
Greece	4
Iceland	2
Italy	27
Luxembourg	1
Netherlands	12
Portugal	3
Spain	13
Sweden	6
United Kingdom	27

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department's policy is on the proposed European Development Fund grant to support the Rehabilitation of Roads in Cameroon (PERFED II); and what discussions her officials have had on this proposal with other members of the European Development Fund Committee. [89373]

Clare Short: We support the maintenance of roads in the Cameroon. Improved rural roads can bring considerable benefits to the poorest, particularly those living in isolated rural communities. My officials are examining the European Development Fund project proposal to ensure that it meets our concerns over consultation, social and environmental impacts and capacity for ongoing maintenance. My officials have been in contact with the German Development Ministry (BMZ), who are the lead bilateral donors to the transport sector in the Cameroon. Their view is similar to ours.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what dates Special Advisers from her Department have travelled abroad on official business since 2 May 1997; which countries were visited on each occasion; and what were the names of the Special Advisers who travelled on each occasion. [88437]

Clare Short [holding answer 30 June 1999]: For the period 2 May 1997 to 5 July 1999, Special Advisers in my Department have travelled overseas in an official capacity on 16 occasions to a variety of locations. The total cost of travel and accommodation was £33,285.00. All travel complied with the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by her special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89979]

Clare Short: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997, stating in each case whether the results were published. [89685]

Clare Short: There are two relevant pieces of research:

a report was produced in October 1997 by Opinion Leader Research to explore public attitudes to international development issues. This was published on the Department for International Development (DFID) website; in June 1999 a readership survey was carried out in relation to "Developments", a magazine produced by DFID to raise awareness of development issues. The results of this are still being analysed and have not been published.

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by her Department into Parliament in 1998 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89164]

Clare Short: None.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid is being delivered to the people of the Nuba Mountains region in Sudan. [89521]

Clare Short: UN and non-governmental organisations are delivering assistance to Government of Sudan controlled areas of the Nuba Mountains. They are also delivering more limited relief aid to Sudan Peoples' Liberation Army (SPLA) held areas, where access is a serious constraint.

A UN mission visited the Nuba Mountains region, including some SPLA controlled areas, from 21 to 26 June. The team's conclusion was that although there is no evidence of widespread famine, there is malnutrition among children and displaced people, and significant needs for water, health and basic education. The UN is negotiating with the parties to the conflict for improved access for relief supplies.

Serbia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if, in the context of aid for Serbia, assistance to reconstruct a hospital is humanitarian assistance or reconstruction. [89973]

Clare Short: We will consider the provision of humanitarian assistance to Serbia on a case by case basis. We would assist with the provision of hospital facilities if they were an immediate humanitarian need which could not be met from other sources. We are not aware of any such needs.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Millennium Compliance

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish information about preparations made by other countries to deal with the millennium bug. [90106]

Mr. Hoon: Action 2000 are summarising on their website information which is already publicly available from other countries' official Year 2000 web pages. This is designed to assist businesses by providing the information in one place. In addition the Government are in the process of gathering local information which will be placed on the FCO website.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has held with the Government of Chile concerning (a) its legal process and (b) the immunity of members of the armed forces from prosecution. [88893]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 1 July 1999]: We have not held discussions with the Government of Chile concerning these matters. My understanding is that members of the Chilean armed services do not have "immunity from prosecution" under Chilean law.

Ministerial Visits

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on what dates Ministers in his Department plan to be absent from the office in 1999; [89615]

(2) if he will list the overseas visits proposed for (a) himself and (b) Ministers in his Department between 1 July and 1 December. [89614]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 July 1999]: It is not possible to provide a definitive list as my visits programme is under constant review, but during the period 1 July-1 December 1999 I expect, on present plans, to make a number of visits to Finland, Brussels and Luxembourg on European Union business. I intend to visit New York for the United Nations General Assembly. I will be in attendance upon Her Majesty The Queen during her State Visit to Ghana and Mozambique. I will visit South Africa for the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

I, and Ministers in my Department, will also undertake a number of bilateral visits. Our bilateral programme is currently under consideration, but I am already committed to visit Estonia in July and Japan in September.

Vietnam

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the (a) persecution of the Hmong people in Vietnam and (b) migration of the Hmong peoples from their ancestral homelands; and what discussions he has had with his international counterparts about the protection of minorities in Vietnam. [89463]

Mr. Hoon: The Government receive regular reports from our Embassy in Hanoi of the persecution of Hmong Christians in Vietnam; and regularly raises human rights concerns with the Vietnamese Government.

The late Derek Fatchett raised our human rights concerns with the Vietnamese Foreign Minister during last year's ASEM II meeting in London, and again with the Vietnamese Ambassador earlier this year. The Embassy, together with other EU Embassies, regularly raises with the Vietnamese Government concerns about human rights, including on individual Hmong Christian detainees, and will continue to do so.

Solomon Islands

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the Solomon Islands regarding the recent activities of the Guadalcanal Liberation Army. [89526]

Mr. Hoon: The British High Commissioner in Honiara has been in close contact with the Solomon Islands Prime Minister and Government since the escalation of the ethnic unrest. In response to requests from the Solomon Islands Prime Minister the Department for International Development is providing £50,000 to the Solomon Islands Red Cross to help displaced Malaitans and we are providing a vehicle to assist the Royal Solomon Islands Police Force. We are also exploring with EU partners the possibility of EU assistance.

National Minimum Wage

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the British embassies in which locally engaged staff are paid less than the UK national minimum wage. [89872]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 July 1999]: This salary information is not held centrally and to provide it for 220 Diplomatic Posts worldwide would incur disproportionate cost.

The salary scales and conditions of service of locally engaged staff vary from country to country. Salary scales are set by reference to comparable employers based locally at a level which enables posts to recruit, retain and motivate suitable staff.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards the continuation of the trade embargos on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, indicating the proportion of global shipping that is subject to the stop and search regime. [89820]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our aim is to continue to use sanctions to maintain pressure for democratic reform in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The search and visit regime prepared by NATO has not been put into effect following the termination of NATO's military action against the FRY.

Kashmir

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to assist the peoples of Kashmir to determine their own future. [89892]

Mr. Hoon: We believe that any solution, if it is to be permanent and acceptable, must involve, and reflect the views of, the people of Kashmir. Our role, and that of others who wish India and Pakistan well, is to encourage both countries to resolve, through dialogue, the issues between them.

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning whether the current shelling in and around Kashmir was caused by infiltrators. [89891]

Mr. Hoon: We are clear that the current fighting, including shelling by both sides, in the Kargil sector of Jammu and Kashmir was instigated by the infiltration of a large number of armed personnel across the Line of Control.

Indian Ocean Territories

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America on the future of the Indian Ocean territories. [89676]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We hold annual bilateral talks at official level, with the United States, to discuss the British Indian Ocean Territory. This year they were held in May. At these talks both delegations agreed on the continuing strategic importance of the defence facility in Diego Garcia, including in operations against Iraq.

Helms Burton Act

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United States administration on the effects of the Helms Burton Act on Cuba; and if he will make a statement. [89827]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made it clear to the US that we entirely reject the use of extraterritorial legislation such as Helms Burton. We have consistently told the Americans that the best way of encouraging reform in Cuba is to convince the Cubans themselves, through dialogue and co-operation, of the need for change.

Chechnya

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about the persecution and the resultant migrations of Christians in Chechnya. [89998]

Ms Quin: We are aware of unconfirmed reports that some Christians have left Chechnya. But we have no clear evidence to show whether this is as a result of persecution, or local political instability, or the collapse of social support structures in Chechnya. We are discussing the situation with NGO's connected to the region.

HOME DEPARTMENT

HM Prison Aldington

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has for Her Majesty's Prison, Aldington; and if he will make a statement. [89306]

Mr. Straw: Following a review of the projected future requirements of both the Prison Service and the Immigration Service, it has been agreed that Her Majesty's Prison, Aldington should be closed by the end of August 1999 and the site handed over to the Immigration Service to pursue its development as an Immigration detention centre.

Our plans are to redevelop the site under a form of private finance to provide at least 300 detention places with sufficient flexibility to accommodate males, females and families in a safe and secure environment by the spring of 2002. The opening of the Aldington site by the Immigration Service will enable detainees held in prisons elsewhere in the south to be placed in conditions better suited to their status and needs. It will also free much needed spaces in local prisons.

The Prison Service plans to redeploy the staff of the prison elsewhere within the Service. No compulsory redundancies of "mobile" grades are envisaged as a result of the closure of Aldington. Every effort will also be made to avoid redundancies for "non-mobile" grades. In addition to the employment opportunities arising from the construction of a new centre, we estimate that around 150 new jobs will be created once the facility is opened.

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89165]

Mr. Straw: The total number of Statutory Instruments (SIs) registered as General Instruments in 1998, 1992, 1985 and 1973 made by my Department is listed in the table. I have indicated, to the extent the information is available, the number which were made to comply with European Community obligations.

Year	Number of SIs	Number implementing European Community obligations (where applicable)
1973	116	—

With regard to 1985 and 1973, it is not possible, without incurring disproportionate cost, to determine how many of these SIs were introduced to comply with European Community obligations.

The figures given exclude Statutory Instruments which deal with European Parliamentary elections since these do not give effect directly to a Community obligation.

Racial Discrimination

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about persons who have not been racially discriminated against having the power to bring forward a complaint on the part of a group or individuals who have been victims of such discrimination. [89544]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The question has been taken to mean "representative action". In this context, no representations have been received.

In the Commission for Racial Equality's Third Review of the Race Relations Act 1976, there were a large number of proposals for amending the Act. One of the proposals was that the Act should be amended to enable a court or tribunal to consider a complaint where the discrimination affects a number of people who wish to bring a group complaint, without the need for each person separately to bring proceedings. This proposal envisages "class action" and it, along with all the other proposals in the Commission's Review, is currently under consideration.

Highway Offences

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been (a) for offences related to cycling and (b) for dangerous behaviour by pedestrians in the last five years. [89541]

Mr. Boateng: Available information on the number of defendants proceeded against for offences connected with pedal cycles is given in the table.

Number of defendants proceeded against at magistrates' courts for offences connected with pedal cycles, England and Wales 1993–97

	Persons proceeded against
1993	1,370
1994	1,129
1995	1,298
1996	1,513
1997	1,718

Information on the number of pedestrians prosecuted for highway offences are not identifiable separately within the Home Office Court Proceedings Database.

Parking Offences

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many spot fines have been levied by the police on motorists for (a) illegal parking and (b) parking on cycle lanes in the last five years; [89542]

(2) how many motorists have been prosecuted for (a) illegal parking and (b) parking on cycle lanes in the last five years. [89543]

Mr. Boateng: It is not possible to separately identify illegal parking on cycle lanes in the statistics collected centrally.

The table shows the number of proceedings at magistrates courts and the number of fixed penalty notices issued for all offences of obstruction, waiting and parking in England and Wales during the years 1993 to 1997. Statistics for 1998 are not yet available.

Proceedings at magistrates courts and fixed penalty notices issued for offences of obstruction, waiting and parking, England and Wales, 1993–97

Year	Number of proceedings at magistrates courts	Number of fixed penalty notices issued
1993	45,137	3,383,011
1994	32,111	2,698,349
1995	24,192	2,270,732
1996	23,348	2,282,481
1997	23,631	2,199,242

From 1994, local authorities were allowed to enforce parking controls within Special Parking Areas by parking attendants. The number of penalty charge notices issued was 1,706,000 in 1994; 3,148,000 in 1995; 3,523,000 in 1996; and 3,769,000 in 1997.

Personal Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the purposes of each order, currently under preparation, which will relate to the processing of personal data in accordance with the provisions in Schedules 2, 3 and 4 of the Data Protection Act 1998. [89652]

Mr. George Howarth: We are preparing an order under paragraph 10 of Schedule 3 to the Data Protection Act 1998 specifying additional circumstances in which sensitive personal data may be processed. We have no current plans to bring forward subordinate legislation made under any other provision of Schedules 2, 3 or 4 to the 1998 Act.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were processed in (a) January, (b) February, (c) March and (d) April from (i) Kosovo, (ii) Iraq and (iii) Somalia; how many of these were (1) agreed and (2) refused; and if he will make a statement. [89467]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. I regret that it is not possible to separately identify Kosovans within the available statistics for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Initial decisions made on applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom [1,2] by type January to April 1999, nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Iraq and Somalia

	January 1999	February 1999	March 1999	April 1999
Federal Republic of Yugoslavia
Total decisions	45	50	75	985
of which:
Grants of asylum	*	10	10	805

Note:
Years in which no cautions or prosecutions were reported to the Home Office have been excluded

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were charged with living off the immoral earnings of child prostitutes in each year since 1989; and what was the average sentence for such offenders on conviction. [89583]

Mr. Boateng: Detailed information on the number of people charged is not collected centrally.

Although the Home Office Cautions and Court Proceedings Databases identify persons cautioned or proceeded against for offences of "living off immoral earnings or exercising control over prostitute"

(S30 and S31 combined of the Sexual Offences Act 1956), they do not hold information on the age of the prostitute.

Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unprocessed passport applications were outstanding at each office of the UK Passport Agency and in total at the end of the week beginning 27 June. [89845]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The information requested on the number of unprocessed passport applications outstanding at the end of the week beginning 27 June is set out in the table.

Unprocessed passport applications outstanding end of week commencing 27 June 1999

	No.
London	11,026
Liverpool	174,422
Peterborough	95,852
Newport	119,544
Glasgow	124,374
Belfast	1,803
Total	527,021

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, during the present difficulties concerning passports, he will reintroduce the practice of making one-year passports available over the counter at post offices. [89461]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. A review by the Passport Agency in 1994 established that the one year's British Visitors Passport (BVP) was used in the evasion of immigration controls and by criminals, terrorists and football hooligans, and had been a cause of great concern to police and immigration authorities in this country and in Europe for some considerable time. The review also found that the BVP had a poor reputation and with the immigration pressures that other European Union governments were facing, the point had been reached when the BVP's flaws could no longer be tolerated. As a result, the Home Secretary announced on 20 December 1994, Official Report, columns 1214–15, that the BVP would cease to be available after 31 December 1995.

The sound reasons for withdrawing the BVP are such that there is no case for its re-introduction.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the criteria which he applied in awarding the Passport Agency's contract for passport-issuing arrangements to Siemens Business Services. [89974]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The high level criteria applied in awarding the Passport Agency's contract for passport issuing arrangements were:

Security

Continuity of Service

Compatibility

Management Information Systems

Archive System

Commercial and Technical Criteria

Examining Support/Speed/Method/Customer Service

Evergreening

Cultural Compatibility.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates, since 1 April 1998 when (a) Ministers and (b) the Chief Executive of the Passport Agency met trade union representatives to discuss the introduction of new passport-issuing arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [89977]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 1 April 1998, meetings with trade union representatives to discuss various issues, which may have included the introduction of new passport issuing arrangements, have been held on the following dates:

With Ministers, on 19 October 1998, 15 March 1999, 27 May 1999 and 28 June 1999. A further meeting is scheduled for 8 July 1999. With the Chief Executive formally on 13 May 1998, 5 November 1998, 27 May 1999, 23 June 1999 and on an ad hoc basis on other occasions that are not formally recorded.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Civil Service trade unions since 1 April 1998 about the introduction and implementation of new passport issuing arrangements. [89978]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have met with the trade unions on four occasions since 1 April 1998 to discuss staffing issues, including the introduction and implementation of new passport issuing arrangements, in order to understand the trade unions' views and, where necessary, bring them to the attention of the Chief Executive of the United Kingdom Passport Agency. In early April 1999, I agreed that 300 extra staff should be recruited.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff at each passport office have transferred to Siemens Business Services. [89976]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 5 October 1998, 100 United Kingdom Passport Agency staff at Liverpool Passport Office (82 full time equivalents) transferred to Siemens Business Services.

On 16 November 1998, 96 staff at Newport Passport Office (76 full time equivalents) transferred to Siemens Business Services.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his original target dates for the introduction of new passport-issuing arrangements at the (a) London, (b) Belfast, (c) Glasgow and (d) Peterborough offices of the Passport Agency and the dates when he decided not to implement those targets. [89975]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In order of implementation of the new system, the original target dates were:

Target date	Passport Office
7 December 1998	Peterborough
18 January 1999	Glasgow
8 February 1999	Belfast
22 February 1999	London

The decision not to implement the system beyond the multi site pilot at Liverpool and Newport was taken on 18 November 1998.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts awarded in relation to computerisation of the Passport Agency, indicating in each case to whom it was awarded and on what date. [89882]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Contracts were awarded to Siemens Business Services and The Stationery Office (now Security Printing and Systems Ltd.) on 9 July 1997 and 13 June 1997 respectively.

Visitor Processing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of installing and operating a system of recording the entry and departure of visitors to the United Kingdom. [89829]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We estimate that the additional staffing costs at ports would be about £10 million per annum in order to support a system of recording the entry and departure of all visitors. There would also be further significant cost implications for enhancement of the present record systems.

Miss Sokcevic

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the travel documents for Miss Sokcevic (Immigration Reference No. S797486) will be produced. [89862]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The document was issued on Friday 2 July.

Prisons (Mothers and Children)

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of the review of principles, policies, and procedures relating to mothers and babies/children in prison will be published. [90056]

Mr. Straw: The Prison Service report of the review of principles, policies and procedures on mothers and babies/children in prison is published today and copies have been placed in the Library. There are 62 recommendations. The report concludes that the overriding principle guiding the provision of, and allocation of places in, mother and baby units should be in the best interests of the child. The Director General of the Prison Service accepts and welcomes the report and that conclusion specifically. A full action plan, setting out how it proposes to proceed on each of the recommendations will be published soon. A copy of that action plan will be placed in the Library.

EU Corruption

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 June 1999, Official Report, column 435, concerning the European Union Convention concerning corruption involving its officials, what parliamentary consideration it received. [88678]

Kate Hoey: The draft Convention and an Explanatory Note were sent to the House of Commons Select Committee on European Legislation, the House of Lords Select Committee on European Legislation and the Home Affairs Committee on 8 May 1996. The House of Lords Select Committee cleared the draft Convention from scrutiny on 6 June 1996. The House of Commons Select Committee did not have a formal role in the scrutiny of proposals falling under the Third Pillar (Justice and Home Affairs) until 17 November 1998.

Asylum Seekers (Benefits)

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to ensure that persons who have applied in time for renewal of exceptional leave to remain are not denied benefits due to delays in processing their applications. [90239]

Mr. Straw: Responsibility for deciding who is eligible to receive benefits is a matter for the Department of Social Security and the Benefits Agency. An official in the Integrated Casework Directorate wrote to the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency on 27 April to clarify the immigration status of such applicants. In immigration law, provided a person with leave to remain applies for an extension before that leave expires, that person may remain lawfully in the United Kingdom after expiry of that leave until the application is decided, and of course beyond that date if the application is granted. The Chief Executive was advised that provided persons seeking benefits produced evidence to Benefits Agency staff that they had submitted an application for extension of leave before it had expired, then Benefits Agency staff could assume that they were here lawfully.

It was suggested that the Chief Executive might wish to circulate this information widely among Benefits Agency staff, as the Immigration and Nationality Directorate were aware that some applicants were being refused benefits although they had submitted an application for an extension before expiry of their permitted leave.

The delay in dealing with some applications owing to the reorganisation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate is regretted. However, the situation is improving and output from the Integrated Casework Directorate has now recovered to about 80 per cent. of the level achieved during last year.

European Elections

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of instruction material provided to (a) polling clerks and (b) returning officers for the European Elections on 10 June. [89972]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost of the training programme for electoral staff for the European Parliamentary elections was £4 million. Much of the material produced for returning officers and presiding officers was common to both so it is not possible to cost these elements separately.

In addition, the Home Office produced a guidance manual for returning officers. The production and distribution costs were approximately £3,500.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultations his Department carried out with organisations representing blind and visually-impaired people before publishing and distributing literature on the new proportional representation system for the 1999 European elections; [89748]

(2) for what reason his Department's leaflet explaining the new proportional representation system for the 1999 European elections was not available in large print; [89749]

(3) what steps his Department took to ensure that blind and visually impaired people were aware that his Department's leaflet explaining the new proportional representation system for the 1999 European elections was available in Braille and audio-cassette. [89750]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government's explanatory leaflet was produced using 14-point type which is the Royal National Institute for the Blind's (RNIB) minimum recommended size to make the text accessible to visually impaired people. The text of the leaflet was also included on teletext where it is normally possible to enlarge the text size.

It is made clear in the leaflet that it was available in Braille and audio-cassette forms. In addition, advertisements about the leaflet were taken in seven RNIB publications. A press notice about the leaflet was sent to 40 disability oriented publications.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89985]

Mr. Straw: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the party and helping to brief party Members of Parliament. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

European Council (Tampere)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, column 9, concerning the agenda items and related documents to be discussed at the additional European Council to be held in Tampere, Finland, in October, to consider the European Judicial Area, what criteria were used to determine which documents are inappropriate for publication; and what committees of either House of Parliament will be able to consider those published prior to that council meeting. [88690]

Kate Hoey: The draft Convention and an Explanatory Note were sent to the House of Commons Select Committee on European Legislation, the House of Lords Select Committee on European Legislation and the Home Affairs Committee on 1 June 1995. The House of Lords Select Committee cleared it from scrutiny on 13 June 1995.

Prior to ratification of the Convention, the instrument of ratification is drafted, signed by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, sealed, bound and deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of the European Union.

Styal Prison (Babies' Diet)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the daily allowance of fresh fruit and vegetables is for babies in Styal Prison. [89345]

Mr. George Howarth: There is no specific allowance. Mothers in the mother and baby unit at Styal select and order ingredients for their children's meals from a list of available items and prepare them individually to suit the particular child. Fresh fruit and vegetables are always available.

Police Manpower (Costs)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of increasing police force strength by 6,000 officers. [89360]

Mr. Boateng: The estimated annual cost of 6,000 additional constables would be around £150 million.

Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the numbers of officers in their forces on the basis of the resources made available to them.

Election Information

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publish election information material in large print for partially-sighted people. [89374]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government recognise the importance of ensuring that visually impaired voters receive accessible information. We are currently reviewing our guidance on access by disabled people to electoral services following a recommendation in last year's interim report of the Working Party on Electoral Matters, which I am chairing, and will of course continue to keep under review the size of print in which future election material is produced.

Young Offenders

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the level of re-offending among those young offenders who are released on bail. [89363]

Mr. George Howarth: Home Office research in 1997 found that 38 per cent. of juveniles bailed by the police or courts committed offences while on bail. The relevant report is in the Library: Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate Research Findings No 72, "Offending on bail and police use of conditional bail 1998".

The Government have since made up to £35 million available to the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales for bail support and supervision schemes and other remand-related initiatives. Together with the Board and local youth justice services, they are also taking steps to speed up the operation of the youth justice system, which would reduce time spent on bail.

Metropolitan Police Commissioner

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what selection criteria are used in determining the appointment of the Metropolitan Police Commissioner. [89561]

Mr. Straw: An advertisement inviting applications for the post of Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis was placed in the Police Review on 4 and 11 June. The advert invited applications from serving chief constables, equivalent police ranks and above.

Shortlisting and interviews will be conducted in July by a panel chaired by my Permanent Secretary, David Omand and three members: Sir John Quinton, Chair of the Metropolitan Police Committee, Sir Roger Hurn, Chairman of GEC and Sylvia Denman CBE, Chair of Camden and Islington Health Authority.

The selection criteria for the new Commissioner will be based on the competency framework which was developed for the selection of chief officers of police in England and Wales using accepted techniques of job analysis. The competencies sought will include: judgment, self confidence, strategic perspective, achievement focus, communication, effective action on diversity, building teams and influencing others, building upon the professional experience of policing that the candidates will have already demonstrated.

I will make the final selection based on the advice of the selection panel. I intend to announce the name of the successful candidate in August or early September this year. The successful applicant will be appointed in good time to replace the existing Commissioner who retires in January 2000. The appointment is expected to be for a term of five years.

HEALTH

Social Workers

17. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the professional qualifications of the social care workforce. [88254]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to improving the education and training of the social care workforce, and the Government's specific proposals were outlined in the White Paper "Modernising Social Services." We are currently considering the outcome of the second stage of a fundamental review of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. This review has addressed in detail the widespread concerns about the quality of training leading to professional qualifications in social work. We hope to be able to make an announcement as to the findings of this review and its implications for improving professional social work education and training later this year.

Carlisle Hospital

18. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new district general hospital in Carlisle will be completed. [88255]

Mr. Denham: The contractual completion date is May 2000.

Artificial Limbs

19. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent of the choice of types of artificial limb available to NHS patients. [88256]

Mr. Hutton: The range of limbs and components available on the NHS Supplies contract is extensive and includes virtually all the products available. Health authorities can, however, provide a product outside the range generally available if clinicians judge that there is a clinical need to do so.

Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority

20. Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial position of the Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority. [88257]

Mr. Denham: Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority has an allocation for 1999–2000 of £423 million, a 6.35 per cent. cash increase over last year. The Health Authority is forecasting a small surplus this year.

Mental Health Services

21. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what improvements he proposes to make to the quality and provision of mental health services. [88258]

Mr. Hutton: The National Service Framework, to be published shortly, will set national standards and issue clear and robust guidance that will seek to address regional variations in the provision of clinical and cost effective treatments through the publication of service standards. The Framework will focus on consistent, quality care delivered by safe, sound and supportive services.

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many intensive care beds were available to admit new patients detained under the Mental Health Acts on 16, 17 and 18 May. [88829]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect information on the number of available beds on a daily basis. It requests data on the availability and occupancy of National Health Service beds in mental illness wards and, by way of the central return KH03, produces information on an annual basis from each NHS trust.

Personal Social Services

22. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the increase in gross expenditure in England on personal social services in the last year. [88259]

Mr. Hutton: The level of expenditure on personal social services is set by local authorities. Gross expenditure on personal social services in England in 1997–98 was £9,984 million, an increase of £721 million or just under 8 per cent. compared to 1996–97. Gross expenditure figures for later years are not available.

Health Inequalities

23. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of current levels of health inequalities in England. [88260]

Ms Jowell: Reducing health inequalities is one of the main aims of our health strategy and a shared national priority for health and social services. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appointed Sir Donald Acheson to lead an independent inquiry into inequalities in health which, among other things, reviewed the latest available information and summarised the evidence of inequalities. Sir Donald's report, published last November, has assisted the development of our health strategy which we shall be publishing as a White Paper, together with a report on action being taken across Government to reduce inequalities in health.

Modernisation Fund

24. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change there has been in the level of the NHS Modernisation Fund in the past year; and how much of the outgoings has been spent on waiting lists, capital investment, education, staff training, primary care and mental health. [88261]

Mr. Denham: This is the first year of the Modernisation Fund. It has been earmarked for modernising and developing the National Health Service.

Over £1.2 billion has been allocated in 1999–2000. This includes:

£320 million to help tackle waiting in the NHS;

£170 million for capital investment, including £100 million from the Treasury Capital Modernisation Fund;

£120 million to expand education and training opportunities for doctors and nurses;

£320 million for Primary Care, including £54 million for the establishment of NHS Direct; and £50 million for mental health services.

Tobacco Advertising

25. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what period of consultation he proposes on the draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising and Promotion) Regulations. [88263]

Ms Jowell: There will be eight weeks of public consultation on the draft regulations and accompanying draft Regulatory Impact Assessment. The consultation paper was published on 17 June and consultation will end on 13 August.

Cancer

26. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for introducing a national cancer action team for the NHS. [88264]

Mr. Hutton: The establishment of a national Cancer Action Team was announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 20 May 1999, Official Report, columns 401–02, as part of a plan of action to tackle cancer and save lives. The Team will work with the National Health Service and other key organisations to raise the standard of cancer care in all our hospitals to that which is already being achieved in our best. The Director of the Cancer Action Team will take up post in July.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the psychological problems suffered by cancer patients; and if he will make a statement. [89097]

Mr. Hutton: Psychological problems suffered by cancer patients have been extensively researched. The need for psychological support for cancer patients was acknowledged in the "Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services" published by the Department in 1995 (the Calman-Hine report). The Joint Collegiate Council for Oncology in May 1996 issued guidance to doctors on psychological support services for cancer patients and their families. The importance of psychological support has also been encompassed in the series "Improving Outcomes in Cancer" published by the National Health Service Executive since 1996.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has assessed on the usefulness of gemcitabine in treating patients with cancer of the pancreas; and how many health authorities are funding this treatment. [89082]

Mr. Hutton: Gemcitabine is licensed by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) for palliative treatment of advanced non-small cell lung and pancreas cancers. The MCA licenses drugs on the basis of quality, safety and efficacy. We do not have central information on which health authorities authorise hospitals to prescribe gemcitabine.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will commission a study into the impact on long-term survival rates for cancer patients of using the latest chemotherapy drugs; and if he will make a statement; [84237]

(2) if he will commission a study into the relative cost effectiveness of using (a) drugs, (b) surgery, (c) chemotherapy, (d) radiography and (e) other methods in the treatment of cancers; and if he will make a statement. [84242]

Mr. Hutton: The Department and the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, are already funding studies which evaluate the effectiveness of treatments for individual cancers. Details of projects supported by the Department can be found on the National Research Register available in the Library or on www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence will also appraise the effectiveness of specific cancer drugs for use in the National Health Service.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the findings of the report, "The Case for an Increase in Oncology Drug Expenditure in the UK", by the Campaign for Effective and Rational Treatment, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement; [84246]

(2) what guidance he has given to health authorities on oncology drug spending following the publication of the report by CERT on oncology drug expenditure in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [86624]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to equitable access to high quality care and have made the treatment of cancer one of our first priorities. Treatment decision, including the use of chemotherapy, should be evidence based and agreed jointly between doctor and patient. We will consider carefully the information contained in the Campaign for Effective and Rational Treatment report as we take forward work to reduce variations in cancer care across the country.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those cancer treatment drugs most effective in treating each type of cancer in the past year. [84417]

Mr. Hutton: The British National Formulary lists all cancer drugs used for cancer treatment and side effects. It is for clinicians to decide the most appropriate and most effective treatment for individual patients.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Cancer Beacon will be assessed in terms of raising standards in cancer care; and if he will make a statement. [89071]

Mr. Hutton: The eight Cancer Beacons announced on 23 June are part of a wider programme to raise the quality of care provided by the National Health Service. Over the first two years, Cancer Beacons will focus on improving cancer care by demonstrating examples of a quality service. Each Cancer Beacon will receive £50,000 over two years to enable them to share good practice through networks and events organised through the NHS, such as exchange visits, open days and a new national 'service delivery practice' database on the NHS web to which all NHS organisations will have access. Cancer Beacons will agree with NHS Executive Regions on the education arrangements and dissemination of messages about their service and will produce an annual report on progress.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities which authorise GPs to prescribe (a) Irinorelbine for the treatment of lung cancer, (b) Irinotecan for the treatment of colorectal cancer and (c) Paclitaxel for the treatment of ovarian cancer. [89096]

Mr. Hutton: All cytotoxic chemotherapy drugs for the treatment of cancer are prescribed by hospital specialists and not by general practitioners in the community. We do not have central information on which health authorities authorise hospitals to prescribe these drugs. Irinorelbine has not yet been licensed by the Medicines Control Agency so we would expect it to be used only in the context of clinical research.

Nurses

27. Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage nurses to return to the NHS. [88265]

Mr. Denham: The Government are supporting a number of initiatives to encourage nurses to return to practice in the National Health Service.

On 1 February, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a £5 million nursing recruitment campaign outlining improved pay and conditions for nurses and targeting, in particular, trained nurses who are no longer working in the NHS. The campaign attracted a very encouraging response with over 53,000 inquiries, 5,000 of which were from potential returners. Since the campaign began, over 1,000 nurses have returned to employment in the NHS, in England.

Doctor Training

28. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his plans to increase the number of medical doctors in training. [88266]

Mr. Denham: In July 1998 the Government accepted the proposal to increase medical student intake in the United Kingdom by about 1,000 places per year. 842 additional places have already been announced for medical students in England, with more to be allocated in due course. Numbers of postgraduate medical trainees are also increasing.

Government Policies

29. Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to explain their policies to the medical profession. [88267]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to effective communications with all stakeholders of the National Health Service. Members of the ministerial team and officials meet representatives of all health professions frequently. Specific examples of policy communications this year include: Primary Care Groups which involved the medical profession attending meetings, seminars and a major national conference on 13 April—"Primary Care: Turning the Vision into Reality"; "Primary Care Trusts: Establishing Better Services" provides answers to some of the initial questions about the establishment of Primary Care Trusts; "Clinical Governance: Quality in the New NHS" contains proposals for making quality of care the driving force for the development of health services in England; and "Working Together", a framework to secure a quality workforce.

Waiting Lists

30. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made independently to audit the relevance and accuracy of NHS waiting list figures. [88268]

Mr. Denham: The management processes which support data management and their data outputs, including National Health Service waiting list data, are independently audited within Data Accreditation, which was launched in August 1997. Data Accreditation is currently voluntary but it is intended that elements of it should become mandatory from April 2000.

Departmental statisticians working to their professional code of practice also carry out regular reviews of the needs for the statistics collected, which include the relevance of the data, and carry out validation checks on waiting list data before they are published.

Dental Services

32. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will publish their strategy on NHS dentistry. [88270]

Mr. Denham: The Government's strategy on National Health Service dentistry will be published later this year.

Lancashire Health Authority

33. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increase in revenue provision he is planning for Lancashire health authority for 2000–01. [88271]

Mr. Denham: Announcements on the unified allocations to health authorities for 2000–01 will be made later this year.

Millennium Emergency Cover (Merseyside)

34. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that NHS trusts in Liverpool are able to meet the challenge of providing emergency cover over the millennium period. [88272]

Mr. Denham: A Liverpool and North Mersey Emergency Services Action Group has been established to develop further a whole system strategy for primary and secondary services across Liverpool and North Merseyside to ensure that health authorities, National Health Service trusts and general practitioners work together cohesively and make best use of available resources during next winter and the millennium holiday period. Additionally, NHS Direct, the telephone advice service, is expected to be fully operational in Liverpool and North Merseyside in December and this will provide additional support to enable health care systems across Liverpool and North Merseyside to cope better next winter.

Private Health Care

35. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure the effective regulation of private health care. [88273]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Miss Johnson) today.

Smallpox

36. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the retention of samples of smallpox-related material. [88274]

Ms Jowell: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Casualty Services

37. Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many casualty modernisation schemes are planned this year. [88275]

Mr. Denham: 170 modernisation schemes in 149 hospitals are being funded this year through the accident and emergency modernisation programme. This is the largest ever investment in the modernisation of accident and emergency departments in the National Health Service.

Accident and Emergency Services (Wakefield)

38. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the provision of acute and accident and emergency hospital services by Wakefield health authority. [88276]

Mr. Denham: Wakefield health authority is considering a range of options on the future delivery of health services. It expects to undergo consultation in August of this year.

Out-patients

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many first out-patient appointments were seen by the NHS in the year to the end of March; and what the figure was in each of the two previous years. [88269]

Mr. Denham: The figures requested are set out in the table:

Year	First out-patients seen (all specialities)
1996–97	11,220,320
1997–98	11,496,788
1998–99[1]	11,621,481

[1] Provisional

Oncology Drugs

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the proportion of the total amount spent on oncology drugs in each of the past five years which has been paid for by private healthcare insurance; and what proportion of the total spending for each of these years has been spent within clinical studies. [86632]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Public Health

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the White Paper on public health. [87447]

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the White Paper "Our Healthier Nation" will be published; and if he will make a statement. [89090]

Ms Jowell: This afternoon, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health launched "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation", the White Paper setting out the Government's health strategy for England.

NHS Trusts (Running Costs)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into the running costs of NHS trusts, with particular reference to (a) cost and quality of service and (b) overheads, buildings and plant. [88390]

Mr. Denham: No research has been specifically commissioned into the running costs of National Health Service trusts.

There is no accepted definition for running costs of NHS trusts. The Department collects information from trusts on their management costs. This information is available from audited accounts and compiled in accordance with guidance issued by the NHS Executive. The definition of management costs has recently been tightened to ensure that all costs relating to clinical care are excluded, and all costs properly relating to management (including appropriate proportions of clinicians' time) are included.

Carers

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the most recent figures showing the number of people who are (a) carers and (b) receiving home care, in each of the regions covered by the new Regional Development Agencies in the age ranges (i) 0 to 8, (ii) 18 to 24, (iii) 25 to 50, (iv) 50 to 65, (v) 65 to 85 and (vi) 85 years and over. [88651]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not available for carers aged less than 8. However, the estimated number of carers aged 8 to 17 in Great Britain, for 1996, was between 19 and 51 thousand. The estimated number of adult informal carers in Great Britain is 5.7 millions. Information on the number of (a) adult informal carers for 1995, the latest year for which details are available and (b) the number of households receiving home help or home care, for a survey week in 1998, are given in the tables. The requested information is not available for the new Regional Development Agency areas or for the precise age groups requested.

In response to the National Carers' Strategy, a question is currently being tested for the 2001 Census. This will provide details of the number of carers for different geographical areas by age, and give the number of hours per week for which care is provided.

Table (a): Estimates of adults (aged 16 or more) who were carers, 1995, Great Britain

Breast Screening

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the findings of the pilot projects assessing the impact of extending routine breast screening to women aged 65 to 69 years will be published. [88660]

Mr. Hutton: The pilot studies are due to finish in 2000 and the results will be published once the data have been analysed and evaluated.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the report of the Chief Medical Officer's working group on contingency plans for implementing the findings of the pilot studies on extending the routine call element of the breast screening programme to women aged 65 to 69 to be published. [88659]

Mr. Hutton: The working group set up by the Chief Medical Officer was asked to assess the extent and nature of both current and future workforce pressures in the National Health Service Breast Screening Programme and identify possible ways in which these pressures could be eased. The Chief Medical Officer and Ministers are currently considering the working group's report and its recommendations, which will inform the ongoing work programme to ensure that the screening programme maintains the three year screening interval.

Blood Product Screening

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the (a) total national cost, (b) the average cost to health authorities and (c) the cost to Redbridge and Waltham Forest health authority for the screening of blood products for CJD infection; if he will make a supplementary allocation from central health funds available to cover these costs; and if he will make a statement. [89016]

Mr. Hutton: There is no test available at present for screening blood or blood products for Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease infection. However, the Government have instructed the National Blood Authority to leucodeplete (ie remove white blood cells) from blood for transfusion and not to use United Kingdom-sourced plasma in the manufacture of blood products for the time being. The estimated cost nationally to health authorities of these measures in 1999–2000 is £73.5 million. The cost to individual health authorities will vary depending on their usage of blood throughout the year, and information on the average cost to health authorities and to Redbridge and Waltham Forest health authority is therefore not available centrally. Account was taken of this additional cost pressure when allocating additional resources to health authorities in 1999–2000.

Patient Nutritional Screening

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital trusts in England and Wales have in place a system of nutritional screening for newly admitted patients; and what advice his Department has given on the introduction of such systems. [88867]

Mr. Hutton: There are no data available on the number of hospital trusts which have in place a system of nutritional screening for newly admitted patients as this information is not collected centrally. The Department commissioned a resource pack from the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne which was published in 1997 and a copy was issued to all trusts. It is intended to help trusts to develop and implement a system for nutritional screening.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that good-quality food is provided for people in NHS care. [88247]

Mr. Denham: Guidance on delivering a good quality catering service and improving nutrition standards has been issued to the National Health Service in recent years. All NHS trusts have been asked to adopt a recommended framework for auditing and monitoring performance to ensure consistent standards.

Morbidity Rates

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department has collated on the change in morbidity en route to hospital when the journey is greater than eight miles. [88932]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally. Recent work suggests that mortality may be greatest for total journey distances between three and six miles, and significantly less for shorter or longer total journeys. However a significant body of published research has established a causative link between the length of time from incident to treatment and morbidity/mortality. This is the measure used to set national performance standards for National Health Service ambulance services. Regardless of distance all ambulance services will be required to meet the response time targets set out in Health Circular 1999/091 "Modernisation of Ambulance Services" in 2001, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ambulance Journeys

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average mileage by ambulance from collection of the patient to the nearest accident department. [88931]

Mr. Hutton: The average round trip mileage for emergency ambulance journeys in England is 11.2 miles for urban services and 21.2 miles for rural services.

Route Services

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital trusts are reconfiguring acute services in England where they occupy more than one site, with particular reference to (a) maternity services, (b) intensive care and (c) accident and emergency services. [88933]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate costs.

Centre for Policy on Ageing

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to (a) publish and (b) implement the national standards for care homes developed for his Department by the Centre for Policy on Ageing. [89079]

Mr. Hutton: We are currently considering the Centre for Policy on Ageing's report setting out their proposals for national regulatory standards for older people in care homes. We will be issuing the CPA's proposed standards to a wide range of organisations and individuals for consultation nationally in the summer.

We will carefully consider all the comments we receive on the CPA's report before finalising the standards and the arrangements for implementing them.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualifications and experience are required to be demonstrated by a person wishing to offer domiciliary care services. [89285]

Mr. Hutton: There are currently no requirements outside local contractual arrangements, but new standards are being developed as part of the new regulatory framework for domiciliary care which was outlined in the Social Services White Paper. These will address issues such as fit person criteria, references, checks and training for people offering domiciliary care services.

Long-term Care

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Government's consultation on the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Long-term Care to be concluded; and if he will make a statement. [89299]

Mr. Hutton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State outlined in his statement to Parliament, the Royal Commission has produced a very detailed report in which the Commissioners themselves call for an informed debate on their recommendations. We expect that debate, which has already begun, to be an on-going one and to inform decisions we take on the Commission's recommendations.

Sight Tests

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that sight-testing remains confined to medical practitioners and optometrists. [89465]

Mr. Denham: We have no plans to amend Section 24 of the Opticians Act 1989 which reserves the testing of sight to registered medical practitioners and ophthalmic opticians (optometrists).

Doctor Registration

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that doctors who have been struck off the medical register abroad are not employed by NHS trusts and private hospitals in the UK. [89527]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service issued guidance "The Management of Health, Safety and Welfare Issues for NHS Staff" to all NHS employers in April 1998. This emphasised the need to ensure that references are thoroughly checked and career histories explored when recruiting staff. Private employers would be expected to carry out appropriate checks before recruiting medical staff. The National Health Service Executive is working on a proposed change to application forms for medical staff to include a declaration that a doctor has not been subject to disciplinary action by appropriate regulatory bodies anywhere in the world.

Eastbourne District General Hospital

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the review of services at Eastbourne District General Hospital. [88262]

Mr. Denham: The review of nursing care at Eastbourne Hospitals National Health Service Trust is being carried out by the South East Regional Office of the NHS Executive.

With strong independent membership, it will provide an objective assessment of the current position and provide recommendations which will form the basis of an agreed action plan for the trust. The review group's report will be published.

The review group have now met and are presently collecting evidence from all parties concerned.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 24 May regarding a constituent (ref: POH(6)5608/25). [90065]

Mr. Denham: I replied to my hon. Friend on 5 July.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ministerial Meetings (Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations, the Ministers involved and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials in each case. [87432]

Mr. Nick Brown: Since 1 January 1998, Ministers in my Department have held meetings with Ministers of the Irish Government on four occasions.

The then Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Mr. Cunningham) met Mr. Joe Walsh the Irish Minister of Agriculture on 18 June 1998 in London and I met him on 13 November 1998 in Dublin.

Lord Donoughue met Joe Walsh on 17–19 April 1998 in Dublin and on 17 June 1999 in London.

In addition, informal discussions take place from time to time in the margins of Agriculture Councils.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on (i) the microbiological results of the Meat Hygiene Service's policy of requiring the trimming of contamination from freshly-dressed carcases, and (ii) if the Meat Hygiene Service procedure had resulted in an overall reduction in the incidence of E. coli 0157 in carcase meat. [88297]

Mr. Rooker: No such research has been commissioned or evaluated by my Department. The trimming of meat contaminated with faecal material from carcases will inevitably reduce the incidence of E. coli 0157 on carcase meat.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received on conversion qualifications to allow meat hygiene inspectors and environmental health officers to qualify as official veterinary surgeons. [88282]

Mr. Rooker: I have received a number of such representations, including an outline proposal from the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health for a conversion course for environmental health graduates to enable them to take on the role of Suitably Qualified Officers for Veterinary Purposes at ports and in licensed fresh meat premises.

However, current EU meat hygiene rules and the EU Directives on veterinary qualifications and training require that an official veterinary surgeon for meat hygiene purposes must be a veterinarian whose veterinary qualifications meet the requirements of the relevant Directives.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the level of official supervision in (a) meat processing plants supervised by local authorities and (b) cutting plants supervised by the Meat Hygiene Service. [88298]

Mr. Rooker: None. The specific requirements for official supervision in meat processing plants supervised by local authorities are laid down in the EU Minced Meat Preparations Directive (94/65/EC) and the Meat Products Directive (77/99/EEC, as amended). The frequency of official inspection in such premises is based on a risk assessment using the Inspection Rating in Annexe 1 to Code of Practice No. 9 under the Food Safety Act 1990.

The level and frequency of official supervision of licensed fresh meat cutting plants is specified in the EU meat hygiene Directives (64/433/EEC, as amended; and 71/118/EEC, as amended).

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken to ascertain whether, in respect of allegations being made as to contraventions by owners, managers or staff of slaughterhouses of the meat hygiene or specified risk material regulations, there are mitigating circumstances or other factors which would indicate that to continue or initiate proceedings would not be in the public interest. [88296]

Mr. Rooker: Any allegations which might result in criminal proceedings are thoroughly investigated by members of the Ministry's investigation section in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and other relevant legislation. Such investigations inevitably include questions of whether there are mitigating circumstances. Their report is then sent to the Ministry's prosecution section who, when considering initiating proceedings, comply with the Code for Crown prosecutors and consider not only evidence that may substantiate the contravention but also potential defences and whether, in all the circumstances it is in the public interest for proceedings to be instituted.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will establish an independent inquiry, chaired by a senior lawyer, into the performance and activities of his Department's legal department, in respect of their proceedings against the owners, managers and staff of slaughterhouses for alleged contraventions of the meat hygiene and specified risk material regulations. [88293]

Mr. Rooker: I am not aware of any need for such an inquiry.

Bovine Head-skinning

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the complete skinning of bovine heads is required in instances where no part is to be used for human consumption. [88284]

Mr. Rooker: The complete skinning of the heads of adult bovines is required by the EU Fresh Meat Directive (64/433/EEC, as amended), even when meat is not to be harvested for human consumption, to allow post-mortem inspection to be carried out hygienically.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had with and what communication he has received from, EU Commission officials on the establishment of the Food Standards Agency. [88285]

Mr. Rooker: We and our officials maintain regular contact with the EU Commission over the full range of food safety and standards matters, including keeping it informed of the Government's plans for the Food Standards Agency.

Genetically Modified Ingredients (Labelling)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress in establishing a labelling regime for food genetically modified ingredients/additives and derivatives in human and animal feed. [89014]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are continuing to press the European Commission to publish proposals for labelling of GM additives and GM animal feeds as soon as possible. There are signs that proposals on the labelling of GM additives may be issued by the Commission shortly.

Food Labelling

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make the labelling of food by country of origin compulsory; and if he will make a statement. [88854]

Mr. Rooker: Food labelling rules require country of origin labelling only where it is needed to avoid misleading consumers. Since these rules are harmonised throughout the European Community any additional requirements for country of origin labelling could be introduced only at European level. Retailers may, of course, provide country of origin information on a voluntary basis, provided what they give is true and not likely to mislead the consumer.

Free-range Products

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the criteria which determine whether farmers may call their products free range. [89009]

Mr. Rooker: I assume the hon. Member is referring to free-range egg and poultry meat production. Before eggs and poultry meat can be marketed as free range, EU Commission Regulations require, among other things, that poultry have continuous daytime access to open air runs, mainly covered with vegetation. They also specify maximum outdoor and indoor stocking densities.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the reform of hill livestock compensatory allowances. [88354]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Responses to the Ministry's initial consultation document on the reform of hill livestock compensatory allowances were requested by 25 June. We have received 67 responses from a wide range of interests. These are being analysed and will be made available for public scrutiny in accordance with normal Ministry procedures. A summary of the main points to emerge will be included in a further consultation paper setting out detailed proposals.

Aspartame

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to restrict the use of aspartame in products aimed at children. [89158]

Mr. Rooker: Aspartame has been thoroughly assessed for safety by a number of scientific bodies world-wide including the UK's Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the EC Scientific Committee for Food, and an Acceptable Daily Intake (ADI) set. EC sweeteners legislation limits the use of this sweetener to specific food categories and to certain maximum levels of use in order to ensure that consumers, including children, do not regularly exceed the ADI. This legislation also prohibits the use of aspartame and other sweeteners in foods specifically designed for infants and young children. The Government have no plans at this time to seek further restrictions on the use of this sweetener.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the World Health Organisation concerning the recommended daily intake for aspartame; and what plans he has to amend this level. [89157]

Mr. Rooker: Aspartame has only been permitted for use in food after careful evaluation by independent expert committees in the UK, EU and internationally, including the World Health Organisation committee which deals with food additives. All of these committees have concluded that aspartame is safe for use in food and have set an Acceptable Daily Intake (ADI) for this sweetener of 40 mg/kg body weight. The Government currently have no plans to seek an amendment to this level.

Dioxin Contamination

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what levels of dioxin contamination in United Kingdom and imported fish and fish products have been identified; and if he will make a statement. [89294]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 1 July 1999]: The levels of dioxin found in the latest survey of marine fish are comparable to those reported in other published studies. Full results of this survey and advice from the Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) will be published at the end of July in the MAFF Food Safety Information Bulletin and the accompanying Food Surveillance Information Sheet.

Farmers' Markets

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he has given to the establishment of farmers' markets; and if he will make a statement. [89554]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 1 July 1999, Official Report, column 266.

Set-aside (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of agricultural land in Lancashire is currently subject to set-aside; and what was the annual cost to public funds in the last year for which figures are available. [89557]

Mr. Rooker: The area of set-aside in Lancashire on claims made in 1998 under the Arable Area Payments Scheme (AAPS) was 1,189 hectares. The comparable figure for 1999 is not yet available.

At the 1998 payment rate for set-aside, the area payment for this area of set-aside would have been £359,000.

Quarantine

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if British sovereign bases in Cyprus will be included in the list of countries to which the current quarantine arrangements will no longer apply for pets entering the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [89555]

Mr. Rooker: Discussions are underway with the Cypriot authorities to establish whether the island meets the criteria for rabies freedom set out by the Office International des Epizooties (OIE).

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries from which pets entering the United Kingdom will no longer be required to fulfil the current quarantine arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [89580]

Mr. Rooker: To be exempt from quarantine, pets will have to arrive from European Union and European Economic Area countries, Switzerland, Andorra, Monaco, San Marino, the Vatican and Gibraltar: or from islands outside Europe meeting the Office International des Epizooties definition of freedom from rabies. An announcement of which islands are eligible will be made in due course. The question of eligibility of animals from North America is still being considered.

EC/Seychelles Fishing Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the national shares allocated in the fishing agreement between the European Community and the Republic of Seychelles. [89712]

Mr. Morley: Fishing opportunities for EC vessels in Seychelles waters, for the period 18 January 1999 to 17 January 2002, have been allocated between member states as follows:

(a) Tuna seiners

Spain: 25 vessels

France: 20 vessels

Italy: 1 vessel

UK: 1 vessel

(b) Surface longliners

Spain: 20 vessels

France: 5 vessels

Portugal: 7 vessels.

WALES

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-department public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89683]

Mr. Michael: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89991]

Mr. Michael: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

SCOTLAND

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89172]

Dr. Reid: The total number of statutory instruments (SIs) registered as general instruments by my Department in 1998, 1992, 1985 and 1973 is listed.

Year	Number of Scottish SIs
1998	213
1992	279
1985	159
1972	159

It is not possible without incurring disproportionate cost to determine how many of these SIs were introduced to comply with European Community obligations.

Parliamentary Questions (Scottish Parliament)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what proportion of (a) written and (b) oral questions, answered by his Department since 26 January, the reply contained an indication that this would be a matter for the Scottish Parliament after the transfer of functions. [89806]

Dr. Reid: Since 26 January, my Department has answered 798 written questions and 199 oral questions and sampling suggests that around three quarters and two thirds respectively indicated that either the subject matter or part of the subject matter would be for the Scottish Parliament after the transfer of functions.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89987]

Dr. Reid: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the party and helping to brief party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Administration (Scotland)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the costs of creating a separate social security administration in Scotland; and if he will publish the assumptions made in these calculations. [89077]

Mr. Timms: Social security is reserved to Parliament and remains a Great Britain-wide scheme. Social security administration is integrated across GB and no detailed assessment has therefore been made of the annual costs of administering the present system separately in Scotland. We estimate that the costs of administering social security, child support and pensions in Scotland to be in the region of £600 million.

The estimate assumes that the Department's fixed costs and the fixed costs of its agencies, including the cost of investing in new computer systems, have to be reproduced separately in Scotland without the benefits of GB-wide economies of scale. It also includes the costs of operating the branch network.

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89171]

Mr. Timms: No such statutory instruments had the European Union as their legislative source.

All Work Test

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will produce the alternative to the all work test. [89180]

Mr. Bayley: The Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill contains provisions to replace the all work test with the Personal Capability Assessment. The Personal Capability Assessment will continue to determine, in the same way as now, whether a person meets the threshold of incapacity for entitlement to incapacity benefits. That threshold will not change but the Personal Capability Assessment will also be able to provide additional constructive information about what a person can do, despite their medical condition or disability. This additional information will help personal advisers give their clients the support they need to move back to work. Subject to the passage of the Bill, the Personal Capability Assessment will be included in the ONE service pilots from this Autumn.

Pensions (Age Additions)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has made of the cost of increasing the age additions within the basic state pension by (a) £3 a week for the over-75s and (b) £5 a week for the over-80s. [89376]

Mr. Timms: The net cost of introducing age addition of £3 per week for pensioners aged 75 to 79 and increasing the age addition paid to over-80's from £0.25 to £5.25 would be £640 million.

Notes:

1. Estimates for Retirement Pension have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
2. Means-tested benefit offsets have been estimated using the Income Support Simulation Model and the 1996/97 Family Resources Survey.
3. Estimates are in current prices and benefit rates, and are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total amount of housing benefit, in thousands of pounds per annum, payable to tenants (a) in each local authority, (b) in each region and (c) nationally, for 1998–99. [89586]

Angela Eagle: Information is not available for 1998–99. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

Household Savings

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the percentages of households with (a) no savings, (b) savings up to £1,500, (c) savings between £1,500 and £3,000, (d) savings between £3,000 and £8,000, (e) savings between £8,000 and £10,000, (f) savings between £10,000 and £16,000, (g) savings between £16,000 and £20,000, (h) savings above £20,000, among households with gross weekly income of (i) less than £100, (ii) £100 to £200, (iii) £200 to £300, (iv) £300 to £400, (v) £400 to £500, (vi) £500 to £600, (vii) £600 to £700 and (viii) over £700. [89878]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Notes:

1. The estimates are based on sample counts that have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors that control for region, Council Tax band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non-response.
2. It should be noted that questions on assets are a sensitive part of the FRS questionnaire and have relatively low level of response, and hence higher level of imputation, compared to other parts of the survey. Responses are imputed in around one in ten cases. Evidence also suggests some under reporting of capital by respondents, and figures for income from these sources for pensioners are lower on the FRS compared to other surveys such as the Family Expenditure Survey. In addition, the under reporting of capital is likely to lead to an underestimate of income from the investment and thus contribute to underestimating gross weekly household income.
3. All percentages have been rounded to the nearest integer.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89992]

Mr. Timms: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the party and helping to brief party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

CABINET OFFICE

Policy Co-ordination (Sport)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to co-ordinate Government policy for sports matters between departments. [88497]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Government policy on sports matter is co-ordinated through the Cabinet Committee on Home and Social Affairs; specific questions might be dealt with by other Committees as appropriate.

Additionally the Sports Cabinet, which I chair, provides for a collective policy discussion of most strategic priorities for UK sport. The Ministers with responsibilities which affect sport in England also keep in close touch, and will continue to do so.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Records

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Government will ensure that the retention for non-administrative reasons of departmental records over 30 years old is justified under the same criteria as those which justify extended closure of records over 30 years old at the Public Record Office. [89634]

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Government will take action to ensure that the retention for non-administrative reasons of departmental records over 30 years old will be justified under the same criteria as those which justify extended closure of records over 30 years old at the Public Record Office. [89637]

Mr. Vaz: The current system for the retention by Government departments of records over 30 years old is explained in the White Paper "Open Government" (1993, Cm 2290), particularly paragraphs 9.8 and 9.23–9.27. Grounds for retention are laid out in paragraphs 9.23 and 9.26.

When departments make applications to retain records, they are required to give clear and explicit reasons, making clear in each case what harm would be caused by release. These reasons are considered by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Council on Public Records before being submitted to the Lord Chancellor. The Lord Chancellor permits departments to retain records for no more than 10 years before they must either release the records or submit another application for retention.

The withholding of public records for a period longer than 30 years is currently the subject of public consultation as part of the pre-legislative scrutiny of the draft Freedom of Information Bill.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Government will review the criteria against which the extended closure of records over 30 years old, under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958, must be justified, with particular reference to (a) the definition of national security, (b) protection of the identities of confidential informants and (c) protection of those mentioned, or their relatives, from substantial distress or endangerment. [89632]

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Government will review the criteria against which the extended closure of records under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958 must be justified, with special reference to (a) the definition of national security, (b) protection of the identities of confidential informants and (c) protection of those mentioned or their relatives from substantial distress and endangerment. [89635]

Mr. Vaz: Revised criteria for the closure of records are included in the draft Freedom of Information Bill which is currently the subject of public consultation.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Government will publish the guidelines given to departmental record officers on judging whether the release of a document is likely to cause substantial distress or endangerment to a person mentioned in that document or to relatives of such a person. [89633]

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Government will publish the guidelines given to departmental record officers on judging whether the release of a document is likely to cause substantial distress or endangerment to a person mentioned in that document or to relatives of such a person. [89636]

Mr. Vaz: After an initial consultation draft in 1994, the Public Record Office produced guidance for departmental record officers in 1995. Copies of that guidance will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The guidance is currently being revised as part of the development of a Manual on Access to Public Records which will be issued in September 1999. It is proposed that this manual should be available to the public.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89984]

Mr. Vaz: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

There were, additionally, a small number of PhD awards reported in the non-UFC funded English HE institutions prior to 1994–95 amounting to 118 in 1993–94, 81 in 1992–93 and 45 in 1991–92. No awards are recorded before this time.

School Cricket

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many state schools have (a) cricket nets, (b) cricket squares and (c) inter-school cricket fixtures. [88935]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department does not collect this information.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the percentage of leavers from the 18 to 24 New Deal by each unit of delivery in the United Kingdom from April 1998 to the latest date for which the figures are available (a) whose destination was unsubsidised employment and (b) whose destination was unknown. [89377]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The table shows the percentages of young people leaving New Deal for unsubsidised employment and for whom no destination is recorded for the period April 1998 to April 1999, by each Employment Service Unit of Delivery. In addition to these figures for unsubsidised jobs, the independent research report on leavers with unknown destinations published last month showed that 43 per cent. of respondents said they had left the New Deal for paid employment.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each region the proportion of all those who left the 18 to 24 New Deal for unsubsidised employment who left at each stage of the New Deal process between April 1998 and April 1999. [89371]

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 25 June 1999, Official Report, columns 467–68 on the New Deal, what assessment he has made of the reliability of the survey of young people leaving the New Deal for unknown destinations. [89394]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The recently published survey on leavers with unknown destinations was carried out by a reputable independent organisation under careful management from the Employment Service. It was produced and released in accordance with the Government Statistical Service Code of Practice and I am, therefore, satisfied that the survey results are reliable.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal scheme for those aged under 25 years in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if he will make a statement. [89379]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical figures to the end of April 1999 show that 1,284 people have entered the New Deal for Young People in the Shropshire Unit of Delivery which cover Shrewsbury and Atcham. Statistics from the New Deal are not available yet for individual constituencies; rather they are broken down by Unit of Delivery. I am very encouraged by the progress being made in Shropshire and pleased to see that they are currently in the top quartile in the New Deal Core Performance tables for the proportion of people moving from the New Deal into jobs.

Teaching Days

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on how many days pupils in the state primary and secondary schools will be taught in the 1998–99 academic year; and what were the comparable figures for 10, 20 and 30 years previously. [89823]

Ms Estelle Morris: Regulations require there to be 380 half-day sessions during any school year. This provision is consistent with the 190 days a year on which teachers may be required under their statutory conditions of service to teach children.

Football Study Support Centres

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effect of attendance at football study support centres on the educational standards of the children concerned. [89719]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In June 1998, the Department commissioned the National Foundation for Educational Research (NFER) to evaluate the first six centres in order to provide early indications of their effectiveness and to inform future development plans. NFER's report is very positive about the impact of the centres and will be published in September 1999. A more extensive evaluation of all Playing for Success centres will begin in August 1999.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the cost per pupil of a pupil attending a football study support centre. [89720]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Precise figures are not yet available. Most centres are still in the early stages of development and are adjusting module lengths, pupil numbers and infrastructure arrangements in the light of experience. However, the Department estimates the average cost per pupil at approximately £150.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much funding for football study support centres has been obtained from (a) sponsors and (b) football clubs. [89723]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The amount of sponsorship for Playing for Success is substantial, and sponsors have equipped some centres with full suites of IT hardware. The Department is in the process of quantifying the total sponsorship sum. Each football club is required to contribute one third of the total costs, estimated at £110,000 per annum, in cash or kind.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which children who are (a) disaffected with school and (b) likely to become disaffected have joined football study support centres. [89718]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Playing for Success initiative is specifically targeted at those young people who are disaffected or who are identified as in danger of becoming so. The schools involved are the best judges of which pupils fall into those categories and select pupils who are most likely to benefit from attendance at the centres.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the Premier League and Division One football clubs providing study support centres in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000; and how many children are (i) attending and (ii) planned to attend such centres in the case of each football club. [89721]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Details are shown in the table. Expected opening dates are provisional and the numbers of children taking part are estimated.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of girls attending football study support centres. [89722]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The national evaluation report of the first six centres by the National Foundation for Educational Research (NFER) found girls attended in equal numbers to boys. Feedback from individual Playing for Success centre managers, who monitor attendance by gender, confirms this pattern.

Local Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in establishing boundaries for local Learning and Skills Councils, how he will ensure that the boundaries fit with local travel-to-work and travel-to-study patterns and are within regional development agency/Government office boundaries in cases where local travel-to-work and travel-to-study patterns cross the RDA/Government office boundaries. [90086]

Mr. Mudie: We have asked the regional development agencies (RDAs) and the London Development Partnership for advice on the boundaries of the local Learning and Skills Councils within each region. In drawing up their advice, we have proposed a set of principles which RDAs need to follow. These include that boundaries must fit within RDA/Government office boundaries and should take into account best fit with travel-to-work and travel-to-study areas. They should also be consistent with other key local economic or social units and partnerships—especially with local authorities. We will take decisions on boundaries on the basis of these criteria and the advice of RDAs.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the maximum number of local Learning and Skills Councils in each regional development agency/Government office boundary consistent with the Government's objectives of having no more than 50 such councils nationally. [90064]

Mr. Mudie: We have asked regional development agencies (RDAs) and the London Development Partnership to make proposals on the boundaries for local Learning and Skills Councils by the end of September. We have not set a maximum number for each region, but have set some key principles which will underpin the RDAs' considerations and our decisions on the boundaries. These include a minimum residential population of 0.5 million.

Nursery Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 336, on nursery education, what percentage of three-year-olds in each of the local education authorities listed (a) currently have (i) free full-time early education places and (ii) free part-time early education places and (b) will have (i) free full-time early education places and (ii) free part-time early education places when the promised additional places are provided. [89751]

Ms Hodge: The information is not available in the form requested. Participation rates for individual ages cannot be provided at local education authority level as the underlying population estimates are not sufficiently reliable.

Each three-year-old offered one of the additional free places will be eligible to receive five sessions of early education per week.

NORTHERN IRELAND

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from her Department in attendance; if she will list the number of times each met; if she will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if she will make a statement. [88470]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Officials from my Department regularly attended European Communities working groups when matters of importance to Northern Ireland were being discussed. Occasionally my Department can be represented by officials from the United Kingdom's Permanent Representation to the European Union.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by her special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89996]

Marjorie Mowlam: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Severn Trent Water

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate the level of charges by Severn Trent Water for water at educational establishments; and if he will make a statement. [86870]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 14 June 1999]: This is a matter for Severn Trent Water. The Director General of Water Services has the general function of overseeing companies' use of their charging powers to ensure that there is no undue discrimination between different classes of customer but he has no role in approving their detailed charges. The Water Industry Act 1999 will give the Secretary of State and the Director General new powers to approve charges schemes which should tackle this problem.

Road Deaths

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) pedestrians and (b) cyclists have been (i) killed and (ii) seriously injured in accidents involving motor vehicles in each of the last five years. [89540]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The numbers of pedestrians and cyclists recorded as being killed and seriously injured in accidents involving motor vehicles are shown in the tables.

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many pedestrians have been (a) killed and (b) seriously injured (i) in accidents involving bicycles ridden on pavements and (ii) by bicycles ridden on the road when the cyclist was at fault, in each of the last five years. [89538]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The party at fault in a road accident is not recorded on a national basis.

However, the numbers of pedestrians recorded as being killed and seriously injured who were hit on the footway or verge by bicycles are shown in the table.

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cyclists have been (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in accidents on roads or cycle paths when the pedestrian was at fault in each of the last five years. [89539]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The party at fault in a road accident is not recorded on a national basis.

However, the table shows the numbers of cyclists recorded as being killed or seriously injured on the carriageway or cycleway in accidents which involved a pedestrian and did not involve any motor vehicles. These numbers do not include casualties on cycleways which are segregated from the public road.

Council Housing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the cost, at current prices in pounds per dwelling, of major repairs to council housing stock (a) by local authority, (b) by region and (c) nationally in each of the last five years. [89584]

Mr. Raynsford: A copy of the data available has been placed in the Library. The tables show the average expenditure per council dwelling receiving major renovation work (repairs and improvements costing more than £500 per dwelling) in each local authority, region and nationally. Every year, about 22 per cent. of council owned dwellings receive renovation work costing at least £500.

Figures are presented for the years for which data are available centrally (1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98), at 1997–98 price levels. This information was not collected centrally before 1995–96.

These figures are submitted to the Department by local authorities as part of the annual Housing Investment Programme round. Some local authorities did not supply detailed information of their expenditure on capital works. Such LAs are excluded from this analysis: they have been removed from the LA listings and are not included in regional and national averages.

Differences in average expenditure between regions do not only reflect different quantities of work completed, but also the significant variations in the costs of carrying out the same work in different regions.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the amount of (a) average management and maintenance allowances, (b) guideline rents and (c) the difference between (a) and (b) in pounds per dwelling per week and in thousands of pounds per annum, (i) for each local authority in England, (ii) for each region and (iii) nationally for 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [89585]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

Empty Property Strategy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many empty homes owned by (a) Government agencies and (b) local authorities were brought back into use in 1998 as a result of the developing empty property strategy promoted by his Department. [89678]

Mr. Raynsford: In general information is not collected centrally on the numbers of empty homes brought back into use. Instead data are collected on the numbers of vacant dwellings, which is the key outcome of action to reduce the number of empty homes. Figures for vacant dwellings in England at 1 April 1998 were published in Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions Information Bulletin 189/99 on 2 March 1999 which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the numbers of young, single homeless people in (a) the district council areas of (i) Easington, (ii) Durham City, (iii) Chester le-Street, (iv) Derwentside, (v) Wear Valley and (b) the boroughs of (i) Sedgefield, (ii) Darlington, (iii) Sunderland and (iv) Hartlepool. [89834]

Mr. Raynsford: None, but we are working up a methodology to allow local authorities to produce such estimates. There are real problems in attempting to measure the scale of youth homelessness, either nationally or locally. Few estimates of single homelessness break figures down by age. The term 'homeless' may also be used to represent a number of different levels of housing need. At one extreme, rough sleeping is the most visible and disturbing form of homelessness. But there are also young people accommodated in emergency night shelters, direct-access hostels, squats, bed-and-breakfast accommodation and longer-term hostels. Some people, especially the young will stay with friends and relatives on a temporary basis, sometimes under difficult and trying circumstances. Although there have been a number of estimates commissioned by the voluntary sector to assess the extent of youth homelessness they have not been able to overcome these inherent difficulties and have come up with widely differing estimates.

My Department has recently commissioned research into youth homelessness as part of the Youth Homelessness Action Partnership. One output from this research will provide a more reliable estimate of the numbers of young people affected by various types of homelessness. A tool-kit will also be produced which will be made available to local authorities and the voluntary sector to help them produce accurate figures locally.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997, stating in each case whether the results were published. [89698]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The only central list of market and opinion research currently held in my Department is for research commissioned for information campaigns. Research results are not published. However, copies of quantitative research reports are available on request. In addition, the Department's Survey Control Unit is currently compiling a database of non-publicity surveys conducted since the merger of the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment in 1997. This will not include the Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies, which are responsible for their own research.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the ninth Annual report of the Drinking Water Inspectorate will be published. [90304]

Mr. Meacher: The Drinking Water Inspectorate will publish its ninth Annual Report on Wednesday, 7 July.

The Inspectorate will also publish two leaflets for consumers. "How Good is the Drinking Water" will summarise the main points of the Report. "DWI Report on (Each) Water Company" will give brief details of the quality of drinking water supplied by individual water companies.

Copies of the Report and leaflets will be placed in the Library of the House.

Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 153, if the stakeholders' forum he intended to instigate has been superseded by the two commissions announced by the Minister for the Cabinet Office in his oral statement of 21 May 1999, Official Report, columns 1371–84, on biotechnology. [90066]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 6 July 1999]: The two Commissions announced by the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 21 May do supersede earlier proposals for a stakeholders forum. The Human Genetics Commission (HGC) will advise on applications of biotechnology in healthcare, and the impact of human genetics on people's lives; and the Agricultural and Environment Biotechnology Commission (AEBC) will cover the use of biotechnology in agriculture and its environmental effects. The two bodies will include a wide range of interests including lay members, specialists in ethical matters, consumers and those with a knowledge of the industry. One of the functions of the Commissions will be to consult key stakeholders and the public in formulating their advice to Government.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89981]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speech writing and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

Red Routes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend (a) the red route network and (b) the bus priority network to other cities. [89474]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The red route project and powers are exclusive to London. Elsewhere, it is primarily for local authorities to use their existing traffic management powers to give appropriate priority to buses. We look to them to do so, in the context of developing their local transport plans and bus strategies.

Non-domestic Rates

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to phase in the effects of the 2000 revaluation on non-domestic rate bills in England. [90495]

Ms Armstrong: I fully understand non-domestic ratepayers' concerns about the revaluation and their keenness to know, as early as possible, how they will be affected. They need time to plan ahead. However, we do not yet have complete information about the detailed effects of the revaluation, and will not do so for a while.

We therefore aim to publish in late September a consultation paper outlining options for handling the impact of the revaluation in England. We recognise the need in formulating the proposals for this consultation paper to take account of the views of business organisations. I am therefore convening a consultative forum of national bodies representing business interests to consider this issue and I expect the first meeting to be later this summer.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance he has issued to the Crown Prosecution Service on the prosecution of asylum-seekers in transit in the United Kingdom who have been stopped for bearing false documents. [89672]

The Attorney-General: I have not issued specific guidance on this point. The Crown Prosecution Service has set up a multi agency group to look at policy in relation to this issue and will consider, inter alia, whether specific guidance to prosecutors should be issued. In these cases, as all others, Crown Prosecutors must apply the Code for Crown Prosecutors when making the decision to prosecute. This is a set of general principles requiring the prosecutor to apply an evidential and a public interest test to determine whether a prosecution should take place or not.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings of the JCC he has attended. [89278]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 362.

"Your Right to Know" White Paper

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many submissions were made in the course of the consultation on the 1997 White Paper, "Your Right to Know"; and how many raised objections concerning the substantial harm test as set out in the White Paper. [89361]

Mr. Straw: 572 pieces of correspondence received in response to the White Paper "Your Right to Know" were published in six volumes, under the title "Your Right to Know—Consultation Responses". Copies were placed in the Library and published on the Internet. Correspondence where the author requested confidentiality has not been published.

31 of the published items of correspondence made explicit statements regarding the substantial harm test as set down in the White Paper. Of these, seven (23 per cent.) did not express an opinion as to the desirability or otherwise of the substantial harm test, five (16 per cent.) expressed an opinion in favour of substantial harm, and 19 (61 per cent.) raised objections.

The five in favour of substantial harm were from the Canadian Information and Privacy Commissioner, the Chief Constable of Durham, Charter 88, the National Steering Committee of Nuclear Free Local Authorities and the Campaign for Freedom of Information.

The 19 that raised objections about substantial harm were from a number of individuals and organisations including British Nuclear Fuels Plc, Coopers and Lybrand, British Energy, the Building Societies Commission, the Commission for the New Towns, Lancashire County Council and the Confederation of British Industry (CBI). No one particular interest group or sector dominated the correspondence, objections to substantial harm were received from members of the public and from organisations.

Comments made include:

"substantial harm, as a test, is unworkable";

"British Energy's preferred approach is that harm would be caused or that there is a reasonable expectation of harm";

"it is difficult to form an objective interpretation of any adjective such as 'substantial' in this context. It would be better to have no adjective because it is already difficult to run the public service really effectively, and if disclosure is likely to cause 'harm' then it is better not to disclose";

"the proposals already recognise the need to supply a 'simple harm' test to disclosure of policy advice. It would not, therefore, seem to follow that it would be sensible to apply a 'substantial harm' test to the other categories, particularly those relating to law enforcement and safety issues";

"the CBI believes the test governing disclosure should be one of 'simple' harm and not 'substantial' harm . . . if the test is to be one of 'substantial harm' then we believe the competitiveness of business will be affected".

Clearly, a significantly greater number of correspondents who commented on substantial harm saw difficulties with the test than saw it as unproblematical. This was one of the considerations taken into account when we decided, in preparing the draft Bill, to revisit this test and see whether it could be made more workable.

Metropolitan Police Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests have been received by the Metropolitan Police for each of the last three years; and what plans he has to use his powers under the Data Protection Act 1998 to restrict, at the request of the data subject, a subject access request to personal data which relate to criminal records. [89654]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the number of subject access requests received by the Metropolitan Police for each of the last three years has been:

1998: 24,984

1996: 13,896.

The Data Protection Act 1998 makes provision for a new offence to deal with enforced subject access to certain types of record, including criminal records. Because of the close link with the introduction of criminal record checks, provided under Part V of the Police Act 1997, the new offence will not be brought into force before such checks can be undertaken. The Criminal Records Bureau is being established to enable these checks to be carried out.

Work on the implementation and timing of Part V of the Police Act 1997 is being taken forward.

Security Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the figures regarding numbers of personal files held by MI5 which he gave the House on 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 251–54, differ from those in the 1997–98 Annual report of the Intelligence and Security Committee; and whether the MI5 records held in microform are classified within the traffic light system. [89638]

Mr. Straw: The figures given by the Intelligence and Security Committee and those given in my reply on 29 July 1998 to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Ms Russell), Official Report, columns 251–54, are not incompatible. The Committee's breakdown of figures is different from that in my reply. In my reply, I said that the Security Service held approximately 440,000 files, 290,000 related to individuals who may have been the subject of an inquiry or investigation. The 290,000 was further broken down as: 230,000 closed files; 40,000 microfilmed; and 20,000 active files. In its report, the Committee gave the figures as 250,000 hard copy personal records with a further 40,000 on microfiche. It broke the 250,000 down as: 17,500 Green (ie Active) files; 97,000 Amber; 135,000 Red; and additionally, 3,000 temporary Green (Gens). Any minor variance in the figures is a result of rounding. All Security Service microfilmed records are closed and are categorised as Red in the traffic light system.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many records from the period 1909 to 1945 it is intended will be retained by MI5 under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958; on what grounds they are to be retained; how many of them are operational records; and what types of operational record they are. [89640]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service is currently engaged in reviewing its records from between 1939 and 1945. It will then begin the process of reviewing records from the inter-war period. The decision whether to keep or to destroy records that are no longer required for operational purposes is taken by the Security Service subject to the guidelines relating to the retention of material for historical purposes. I set out the criteria that are applied when deciding whether a record is likely to be of historical interest in my reply to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 520. The decision as to which records should be released to the Public Record Office is taken by the Service in the light of an assessment of their sensitivity and the need to protect agents and methods of operation. Further information concerning operational records is not made public.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the release to the Public Record Office of MI5 records from the period 1919 to 1939 will take place; [89639]

(2) what reasons underlie the proposed time scale for the release of post-1945 MI5 records to the Public Record Office. [89641]

Mr. Straw: As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Ms Russell) on 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 251–54, the Security Service is currently reviewing its files relating to the period 1939–45, for release to the Public Record Office. When this work has been completed the Service will turn to the inter- and post-war years. Progress on this will be determined by the resources available to carry out this work.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the Government refused the request by the Advisory Council on Public Records in 1998 to be allowed to consider the conditions under which MI5 records are released; and if the Government will review that refusal. [89642]

Mr. Straw: In July 1998, I invited the Advisory Council on Public Records to review the criteria employed by the Security Service to select files for permanent preservation on grounds of historical interest. The Advisory Council reported in December last year. I placed the report in the Library and announced the Government's response in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths), 3 February 1999, Official Report, columns 619–20.

During the course of the Advisory Council review the Chairman of the Council wrote to me to ask whether I would be prepared to extend the terms of reference to encompass issues relating to access to Security Service records. I replied that I was not then contemplating changing the arrangements under which external access to Security Service personal files which had not been released to the Public Record Office (PRO) was strictly limited to the Commissioners and Tribunals acting in pursuit of their functions. That remains the position. I did, however, agree that officials of the PRO with the necessary security clearance should be invited to examine files earmarked for destruction following review by the Security Service.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extent of surviving Police Special Branch historical records; and for what reasons retention in Department, under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958, still applies to these records and to those of MI6. [89643]

Mr. Straw: The Public Records Act 1958 applies to the Metropolitan Police Special Branch, but not to Special Branches in other police forces. The inclusion of the Metropolitan Police reflects the relationship that continues to exist between the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Metropolitan Police Service.

However, all Special Branches in England, Wales and Scotland operate under the published "Guidelines on Special Branch Work in Great Britain". Paragraph 20 of the Guidelines requires each Special Branch to maintain an effective system for:

> "the identification and destruction of information which can no longer be clearly related to the discharge of its functions".

Because Special Branches need to meet local policing needs—as determined by their respective Chief Constables—as well as assisting the Security Service in carrying out its statutory duty under the Security Service Act 1989, they may need to keep records on individuals who, while ceasing to be of interest to the Security Service, remain of interest in a wider policing context. Decisions on the retention of such records are, therefore, an operational matter for the Chief Constable of the force concerned. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary does, however, reinforce the importance of ensuring that the Guidelines are adopted nationally as the basis for handling personal records.

With respect to the retention of Secret Intelligence Service (MI6) records under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 324.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the release to the Public Record Office of M15 records from the period 1919 to 1939 will take place; [89625]

(2) what reasons underlie the proposed time scale for the release of post-1945 M15 records to the Public Record Office. [89627]

Mr. Straw: As I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Ms Russell), 29 July 1998, Official Report, columns 251–54, the Security Service is currently reviewing its files relating to the period 1939–45, for release to the Public Record Office. When this work has been completed the Service will turn to the inter- and post-war years. Progress on this will be determined by the resources available to carry out this work.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the Government refused the request by the Advisory Council on Public Records in 1998 to be allowed to consider the conditions under which M15 records are released; and if the Government will review that refusal. [89628]

Mr. Straw: In July 1998, I invited the Advisory Council on Public Records to review the criteria employed by the Security Service to select files for permanent preservation on grounds of historical interest. The Advisory Council reported in December last year. I placed the report in the Library and announced the Government's response in my reply to my hon. [89629]

Mr. Straw: The Public Records Act 1958 applies to the Metropolitan Police Special Branch, but not to Special Branches in other police forces. The inclusion of the Metropolitan Police reflects the relationship that continues to exist between the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Metropolitan Police Service.

Mr. Straw: The Security Service is currently engaged in reviewing its records from between 1939 and 1945. It will then begin the process of reviewing records from the inter-war period. Prison Population

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of when the prison population will return to the level at May 1997. [89832]

Mr. George Howarth: No such estimates have been made. The latest projections of the future prison population were produced in May 1999 and a summary is included in the April "Prison Population Brief" which has been placed on the internet at http://www/homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the subject of LD 50 tests on animals; and if he will make a statement. [89724]

Mr. George Howarth: I have received a number of letters on this topic. The most recent correspondence is with the legal consultant to the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection. It would be inappropriate to make a statement at this time as the matter may come before the courts and I do not wish to anticipate or prejudice any such proceedings.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers in transit in the United Kingdom have been stopped from their onward journey and (a) prosecuted and (b) convicted for bearing a false document in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998 and (iv) 1999 to date. [89674]

Mr. Boateng: Details of the number of asylum seekers prosecuted and convicted cannot be identified separately from the information held on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database. I understand that many of the prosecutions relate to people whom the carrying companies refuse to carry. The Home Office will not necessarily be involved and no record is kept of the number of such cases.

Civil Defence

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed changes to the distribution mechanisms for civil defence grants. [89960]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office provides £14.038 million civil defence grant per annum to eligible local authorities in England and Wales as a contribution towards the cost incurred in meeting their civil defence duties. The grant is not intended to meet the full cost of their emergency planning services.

The current system of grant distribution is based on a formula, agreed with the then Local Authority Associations in 1992, and largely based on a two-tier system of local government. The reorganisation of local government created new Unitary authorities in England and Wales, all with a responsibility for emergency planning and, consequently, access to civil defence grant. This reorganisation created numerous anomalies within the funding arrangements that could only be properly addressed by introducing a new mechanism.

The sole avenue of consultation on this issue has been with the Local Government Association (LGA). Following discussions with the LGA a new three-tier grant distribution mechanism has been announced. The mechanism is based on the following rationale:

all 178 grant eligible authorities will receive a basic allocation of £45,000 to ensure a minimum level of service, and the delivery of basic standards of preparedness;

County Councils will receive an allocation of £10,000 for each of the District Councils within the County boundary in recognition of the service that a County must provide to constituent Districts; and remaining grant after the first two elements have been addressed will be allocated according to Bellwin thresholds. The Bellwin Scheme, operated by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, sets a level of expenditure above which central government may contribute to costs incurred by local authorities in responding to major incidents. The use of Bellwin acknowledges the relationship between population size and the workload of emergency planning teams in large areas.

This new mechanism provides funds to all eligible authorities and now has the advantage of being clear, readily understood and equitable.

To ensure protection to those areas where grant will reduce, the full impact of the new mechanism will be phased over one year, 2000–01, with no authority losing more than 10 per cent. of its current allocation.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has responded to Shropshire County Council's letter of 18 June regarding the proposed distribution mechanism for civil defence grants; and if he will make a statement. [89961]

Mr. George Howarth: The Head of Emergency Planning replied to the letter from the Chief Executive of Shropshire County Council on 6 July.

Sexual Offences

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the definitions in law of sexual offences. [90117]

Mr. Boateng: The Sex Offences Review has been set up to review the law in England and Wales. Its remit is to recommend clear and coherent sex offences which protect individuals, especially children and the more vulnerable, from abuse and exploitation; to enable abusers to be appropriately punished; and to be fair and non-discriminatory in accordance with the European Court of Human Rights and the Human Rights Act 1998. The review started in January this year and hopes to report at the end of the year.

Compensation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to decide whether compensation will be paid under the terms of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to (a) Nicholas Mullen and (b) Gilbert Thomas Patrick McNamee. [90071]

Mr. Straw: I expect to be able to decide these applications by the end of August.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time between receipt of applications for compensation for miscarriages of justice under the terms of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 and a decision by the Secretary of State as to whether compensation would be paid for each year from 1991 to date. [90072]

Mr. Straw: All applications for compensation for wrongful conviction are considered first under the provisions of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, and then, if those requirements are not met, under the ex-gratia arrangements announced by the then Home Secretary in his reply to the then hon. Member for Beaconsfield, 29 November 1985, Official Report, columns 689–90, by which I have agreed to be bound.

The readily available information requested relates only to successful applications. The average time taken from the date of application to a decision to pay compensation under the statutory or ex-gratia arrangements, for applications decided in 1991–98, was as follows:

Year	Days
1991	153
1992	75
1993	100
1994	122

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

"Sustainable Energy From Waste"

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to publicise his Department's "Sustainable Energy from Waste" pamphlet; and if he will make a statement. [89118]

Mr. Battle: The Department of Trade and Industry's pamphlet "Sustainable Energy from Waste" was published on 8 June at the annual conference and exhibition of the Institute of Wastes Management in Torbay. It was very well received and is being distributed through the Energy from Waste Association and other relevant trade bodies and through companies and local authorities actively supporting energy from waste as an essential element of an integrated approach to sustainable waste management. The pamphlet complements three other publications produced under the Department's new and renewable energy programme: "An Introduction to Household Waste Management"; "Energy from Waste—Best Practice Guide"; and "Household Waste Management—Some Examples of Current Practice". The latter publication was jointly sponsored with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) and all are available from the New and Renewable Energy Enquiries Bureau at ETSU, Harwell, Didcot, Oxfordshire, OX11 0RA (tel: 01235 432450). On 30 June DETR published "A Way With Waste—A Draft Waste Strategy for England and Wales" for public consultation. This envisages that increased recycling and energy from waste will be vital in the next decade. During the month of June 1999 the "Sustainable Energy from Waste" pamphlet was the single most requested publication from the New and Renewable Energy Enquiries Bureau. It will be publicised further in issue 41 of "New Review", the magazine for renewable energy, which is expected to be published at the end of July and will also be available from the New and Renewable Energy Enquiries Bureau.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that all homes within the United Kingdom should be connected to mains electricity by the end of 2002; and if he will make a statement. [89851]

Mr. Battle: Obviously it is desirable that the relatively small number of homes without mains electricity (less than 1 per cent. of the total UK housing stock) should enjoy such a service. Unfortunately, since the majority of these households are in remote areas, the costs involved can be significant. As is recognised in existing legislation, it would be unfair for existing customers to subsidise the cost of connection to bring down the price for new ones. However, in cases where a supply has been requested and a quote for the connection has been given, the charge can be subject to determination by the Director General of Electricity Supply. Some remote communities have benefited from EU fund assistance with the cost of connection.

Energy Supplies (Millennium)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions Ministers have held regarding the maintenance of energy supplies over the millennium. [89858]

Mr. Wills: Action is being taken by my Department in co-ordination with the Cabinet Office, Action 2000 and the Regulator to monitor the progress being made by the energy sector to become millennium compliant. I am in regular contact with my colleagues to discuss progress.

Independent assessment has shown that the energy sector is well advanced in its compliance work and is on course for business as usual over the period of the millennium.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment the Government have made of the millennium computer compliance of systems relating to the (a) Channel Tunnel and (b) supply of electricity from the French power grid. [89855]

Mr. Wills: The Channel Tunnel has been assessed by the Independent Safety Authority as being 100 per cent. blue in Action 2000 terms—as having no substantive risk of material disruption. There were no significant failures during a full scale test of the systems at the beginning of July. However, the systems will continue to be monitored for compliance and existing contingency planning arrangements will be under constant review over the coming months.

All control systems associated with the Anglo-French electricity Interconnector have successfully met all millennium compliance test criteria. Residual risks to Interconnector operation are currently being assessed and consideration is being given to part loaded operation over the millennium period to minimise the impact of unforeseen events.

The total capacity of the Interconnector is 2x1,000MW circuits; the installed generating capacity in England and Wales is more than 65,000MW, and the typical peak demand over New Year's Eve is likely to be in the order of 37,000MW.

The Government, Regulators and Action 2000 will continue to monitor the arrangements being made by those responsible for the provision of infrastructure services in seeking to ensure that it will be business as usual over the millennium period.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the tendering documents which were sent to those companies wishing to seek export credit assistance in respect of the proposed Ilisu Dam. [90122]

Mr. Wilson: The Export Credits Guarantee Department does not require companies seeking export credit assistance to produce the tender document issued by the prospective buyer and therefore no copy is available.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria the Export Credits Guarantee Department will apply in relation to the proposed Ilisu Dam. [90124]

Mr. Wilson: The Export Credits Guarantee Department will employ its normal underwriting criteria, to ensure that the provision of any support which it might give for this project involves an acceptable risk. Part of the underwriting process involves looking, with other Export Credit Agencies, at a range of issues, including the environmental and social aspects of the project. In this case, these include the resettlement of the local population and protection of cultural heritage. ECGD will also consider the economic and political risks involved.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the terms of reference for the report he has commissioned into the proposed Ilisu Dam. [90123]

Mr. Wilson: The terms of reference will be placed in the Library along with the report as soon as it is available.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those individuals, organisations, other Governments, other United Kingdom Government Departments and public bodies who are to be consulted (a) during the preparation of the report he has commissioned into the proposed Ilisu Dam and (b) before a decision is made to provide assistance in respect of the Dam under the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991. [90125]

Mr. Wilson: The Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) is consulting other Government Departments including DTI, DFID, FCO, HMT and DETR, both with regard to the preparation of the report and on the provision of support, and has commissioned work from an international environmental consultancy and an independent social development expert. ECGD is also consulting other export credit agencies including the Swiss, American and German agencies. ECGD has discussed with relevant Turkish Government departments and public bodies.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whom he has commissioned to prepare an independent report into the proposed Ilisu Dam; when the report was commissioned; when he expects it to be finished; and how much it will cost. [90126]

Mr. Wilson: An international environmental consultancy was commissioned to carry out an independent review of the Swiss commissioned Environmental Impact Assessment. Discussions regarding the commissioning of this report commenced in May 1999 and it is expected to be finalised shortly. The estimated cost will be around £5,000.

Additionally, a field study is to be carried out by an independent social development expert to gauge the views of the local population. This report was commissioned in early June 1999. It is hoped that it will be carried out shortly. The estimated cost will be around £20,000.

Brewing Industry

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the effect of current takeover bids in the pub trade on the United Kingdom brewing industry. [89971]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Where a merger qualifies for investigation under the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry decides, in the light of the independent advice of the Director General of Fair Trading, whether or not to refer the merger to the Competition Commission for investigation. All cases are considered on their individual merits.

Tele-conferencing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the growth of tele-conferencing in United Kingdom business; and if he will make a statement. [89929]

Mr. Wills: The Department of Trade and Industry's recently published international benchmarking study, "Moving into the Information Age 1999", shows that UK businesses are making increasing use of 'video-conferencing' (usage rose to 22 per cent. from 14 per cent. in the previous year), and lead the G7 countries in this area. No separate figures are collected for telephone conferencing.

The Department is encouraging further use of 'video-conferencing' through its Information Society Initiative, which encourages UK businesses to take better advantage of information and communications technologies to improve their performance.

Working Time Regulations

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to help business to implement the Working Time Regulations. [90594]

Mr. Byers: Today, I wrote to a number of representative groups to consult on two deregulatory amendments to the Working Time Regulations. The proposed amendments draw on our experience of the Regulations being in force for their first year and reflect the concerns that have been raised with us in that period. The proposed amendments will relieve some significant administrative burdens on employers, without removing the protection that the Directive provides to workers. A copy of the consultation letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Unsolicited Faxes

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he and his Department (a) have taken and (b) plan to take to tackle the problem of unsolicited faxes. [90182]

Mr. Wills: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the hon. Member for Faversham and Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 12 May 1999, Official Report, column 149.

Libya

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) advice and (b) assistance has been provided by his Department to delegations intending to visit Libya. [90099]

Mr. Wilson: Following the suspension of UN Sanctions in April, the Department has encouraged several private sponsors of trade missions to take forward their plans for taking business delegations to Libya this summer and autumn. However, up until now that encouragement has fallen short of formal endorsement of particular missions or offering financial assistance. Without a functioning Commercial Section in a British Embassy in Tripoli, British Trade International is currently unable to offer the full range of assistance which is usually associated with visits which receive full Government assistance. We are actively pursuing the re-establishment, at the earliest opportunity, of a fully operational commercial section.

In light of the welcome announcement by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary today, Official Report, columns 1033-43, on WPC Fletcher, I am able to outline the following staged approach to supporting trade promotion with Libya:

British Trade International's desk officer for Libya will travel next week with a trade mission. This will enable us to handle with first hand knowledge business inquiries and a planned programme of presentations and promotional events around the country. British Trade International has already established a WebPage to make available information on Libya as it becomes available.

We have invited sponsor organisations to apply for British Trade International support for trade missions in the period 2000–01. Officials are also discussing with other government departments their own plans for future trade missions and the possibility of Ministerial visits.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding Air Passenger Duty. [89548]

Janet Anderson: We have had no discussions with the Chancellor specifically on Air Passenger Duty. However, I am aware of the industry's concerns and have passed these on to the Treasury.

Archaeology

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last met and when he next intends to meet (a) the British Archaeological Trust and (b) the Council for British Archaeology. [89406]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 July 1999]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Arts met the Council for British Archaeology on 17 November 1998. I have not yet met the British Archaeological Trust. Any future meetings with either body will be arranged as appropriate.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89990]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

Films

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many films supported by the National Lottery have been released through British-owned distributors; and what proportion this represents of the total number of Lottery-funded films. [89408]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 July 1999]: To date, 53 Lottery-funded feature films have already been released, await release or are in production/post-production with assured distribution. Of these, 31 films have been or will be distributed by British-owned distributors. This represents 58.5 per cent. of that total.

TREASURY

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of people who are currently taking advantage of the option to drawdown capital from their pension fund rather than purchasing an annuity. [89462]

Dawn Primarolo: This information is not collected, but indications from pensions industry sources are that around 30,000 people may have income drawdown arrangements.

Child Poverty

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Ms Stuart) of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 457, what definition he used for a child in poverty; and, using that definition, what estimate he has made of the number of children in poverty (a) at present and (b) by the end of 2002. [90087]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 July 1999]: For the definition of child poverty, I refer the hon. Member to the written answer which the Economic Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 244–45. The latest data on the number of children living in low income households can be found in "Households Below Average Income, 1979–1996/7", which is published by the Department for Social Security.

Higher-rate Taxpayers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage of taxpayers who are higher-rate taxpayers (a) in each county in England and (b) in equivalent areas in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) Northern Ireland. [89812]

Dawn Primarolo: The table shows approximate estimates of the percentage of taxpayers who are subject to higher rate tax for 1996–97, the latest year for which these estimates are available. These estimates are based on a sample survey and the sample size is not large enough to allow separate estimates to be made for some unitary authorities in Scotland and Wales or for Northern Ireland areas other than Belfast.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the average personal income levels for each parliamentary constituency. [89713]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Sanitary Products (VAT)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on reducing the rate of VAT on sanitary products. [89965]

Dawn Primarolo: In the last two years Treasury Ministers have received almost three hundred letters and a few small-scale petitions on reducing the rate of VAT on sanitary products. There have also been two early-day motions on the subject.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the latest period for which information is available, how many drug trafficking groups which deal primarily in Class A drugs were disrupted or dismantled by enforcement agencies; and if he will make a statement. [87445]

Dawn Primarolo: The latest figures from HM Customs and Excise show that 131 and 104 drug trafficking groups were disrupted or dismantled in 1997–98 and 1996–97 respectively. These do not identify Class A drugs separately.

From the year 2000, all relevant agencies will be required to collect information showing the number of drug trafficking groups disrupted or dismantled each year, and will identify Class A drugs separately.

National Savings

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what performance targets have been set for National Savings for 1999–2000. [90496]

Ms Hewitt: National Savings has as its declared aim to add value by helping to reduce the costs to the taxpayer of Government borrowing and by supporting Government savings policies. This is supported by two objectives:

to market Government debt to retail investors so as to help to minimise the combined cost and risk of the total national debt and to contribute to the Government's funding needs; to promote Government savings policies among personal investors.

In meeting these objectives the Agency will operate cost effectively and in a competitive and commercial manner that does not distort the savings market; and in a manner that benefits both Government and the retail saver—now and in future. During 1999–2000 National Savings will be set the following challenging targets:

i. To work within the terms of the funding remit for 1999–2000;

ii. Following the outsourcing of National Savings' operations, by 31 March 2000 to implement a productivity measure to monitor cost reductions;

iii. No less than 97 per cent. of all customer sales documentation to be issued within the published time scales;

iv. No less than 97 per cent. of all customer sales documentation to be 100 per cent. accurate;

v. No less than 97 per cent. of all customer payments documentation to be issued within the agreed time scales;

vi. No less than 97 per cent. of all customer payments documentation to be 100 per cent. accurate;

vii. No less than 97 per cent. of after sales customer correspondence to be responded to within agreed time scales;

viii. To introduce a new Pensioners Bond by mid July 1999;

ix. To agree a new contract with POCL, by 30 September 1999, which secures improved commercial practice and enables development of a new relationship to incentivise value, service and cost competitiveness;

x. To achieve IiP accreditation by 2000;

xi. To make firm proposals for the resolution of the historic transaction accounting discrepancies by 31 October 1999;

xii. To publish the first full set of audited product accounts by 31 December 1999.

The funding remit sets out the costs and volume assumption that National Savings works to. The remit was published in the Debt Management report issued in March 1999.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Chocolate Directive

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the European Commission's objections to the proposed comitology provisions of the proposed EU Chocolate Directive. [90091]

Mr. Rooker: The Commission objected to a part of the proposed Directive which limited its powers to make technical changes to the law. However, I am pleased to say that a new Presidency compromise has now received Commission support and I am hopeful that a Common Position will be achieved during the Finnish Presidency.

Wild Boar

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to encourage individual identifications of wild boar on farms; and if he will make a statement. [89939]

Mr. Rooker: There are no plans to require that wild boar be individually identified on farms. Producers are free to do so if they want.

Intervention Food Stocks

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the daily cost to the European Union for the destruction of intervention food stocks in the last year for which figures are available. [89833]

Mr. Rooker: Except in comparatively rare instances where they became damaged in store, intervention stocks of cereals, beef and milk products are sold back onto the market when circumstances permit.

Special arrangements exist for recognised producer groups to withdraw from the market certain fish and fruit and vegetables subject to their meeting the required grading standards. Withdrawn fish stocks may be returned to the sea or denatured for use in the production of fish meal. Fruit and vegetable stocks are destroyed by biodegradation or composting but may also be provided free to non-profit making organisations where their use can be shown to be additional to the organisations' normal requirement.

Unpublished EU figures[1] for the financial year ended 15 October 1998 show the total cost of compensation paid to producer groups as:

	£ million
Fruit and vegetables	96.56
Fish	6.98

Separate figures for the various means of disposal are not available.

Figures for the UK are:

	£ million
Fruit and vegetables	1.89
Fish	1.89

In the marketing year 1998–99 the UK supplied fruit and vegetables to the value of £14,100 to non-profit making organisations.

Withdrawals occur on a seasonal basis and the daily cost could only be determined by assuming that the expenditure was spread evenly over the year.

Monsanto

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the trips, facilities, gifts and other offerings of a financial value provided by Monsanto to (a) Ministers and (b) civil servants in his Department since 1 May 1997. [88955]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 29 June 1999]: I am not aware of any trips, facilities, gifts or other offerings of a financial value being provided by Monsanto to Ministers or officials in this Department since 1 May 1997.

Chemical Residues (Crops)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the chemical residues retained as a result of crop treatment in (a) imported US genetically modified soya and (b) imported non-enetically modified soya. [88942]

Mr. Rooker: Two genetically modified (GM) types of soya are currently grown in the USA. One is tolerant to the herbicide glyphosate, and the other to the herbicide glufosinate-ammonium.

Experimental studies indicate that two major residues may be found in glyphosate treated soya. The residues concerned are glyphosate itself and its metabolite aminomethylphosphonic acid (AMPA). These two residues occur in both conventionally bred soya and genetically modified (GM) glyphosate tolerant soya. However, the levels of the metabolite AMPA are generally higher in GM crop.

In the case of glufosinate-ammonium the major residue in conventionally bred varieties is glufosinate. In GM varieties the major components of the residue are glufosinate and a metabolite n-acetyl glufosinate.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many invitations (a) he and (b) the Minister have received to visit slaughterhouses since their appointments; and how many each has visited. [88337]

Mr. Nick Brown: My hon. Friend the Minister of State has visited slaughterhouses on eight occasions since 1 May 1997.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Trial Postponements

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many trials have been (a) postponed and (b) rescheduled to fit in with the trial judge's social and holiday commitments in the last 12 months to date; and if he will make a statement. [89556]

Mr. Vaz: The information is not kept.

Company Liability

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to ensure that companies are legally liable for injuries caused to overseas workers as a result of operational decisions taken in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [89350]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 2 July 1999]: Under English and Scots law companies are liable for injuries to their workers caused by their negligence. The courts decide in accordance with well established legal principles under each legal system whether claims may proceed in the English or the Scottish courts when it is alleged that the cause of injuries to overseas workers was operational decisions taken in the United Kingdom. The Government has no plans to legislate in this area.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he plans to bring UK law into line with Article 2 of the 1968 Brussels Convention on court action against companies registered abroad. [89349]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 2 July 1999]: Under Article 2 of the 1968 Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters, to which the United Kingdom is a party, a defendant is entitled to be sued in the courts of a member state of the European Union where he is domiciled. Once this basis of Jurisdiction has been established the courts of that state generally have no discretion to refuse to hear the case. However, this rule applies only to those cases falling within the scope of the Convention. In all other instances, and notwithstanding that jurisdiction has otherwise been established under English law, a court in England and Wales has a discretion to refuse to hear a case if in all the circumstances of that case it is satisfied that there is another jurisdiction which is clearly more appropriate to hear the case. The courts in England and Wales apply this long-established discretion in the interests of all the parties and the ends of justice and the Government has no plans to amend it.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court actions for mortgage repossessions were brought at Newton county court in each year since 1990. [89680]

Mr. Vaz: This question relates to Nelson county court. The numbers of mortgage actions between 1990–98 were:

Year	Actions entered
1990	238
1991	286
1992	277
1993	203
1994	205
1995	235
1996	214
1997	180
1998	246

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance has been issued to magistrates and crown courts on the trial and sentencing of asylum seekers who have been stopped in transit in the United Kingdom for bearing false documents. [89673]

Mr. Vaz: There are no guidelines for trials in these precise circumstances. Like any other criminal trial, such cases are subject to the relevant statutory provisions, rules of court, practice directions, and case law. There are also no guideline judgments reported on sentencing in these circumstances. Within the statutory sentencing framework laid down by Parliament, the nature and severity of penalties imposed by the courts are matters of judicial discretion. Guidance can however be found in recent decisions by the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division), in particular in Ali Osman (1999) 1CR.APP.R.(S.) 230 and Daljit Singh (1999) 1CR.APP.R.(S.)490.

Police Authority-Magistrates Court Committee Chairmen

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of the number of people in England and Wales who are both chairman of a police authority and of a magistrates court committee where the areas of operation are approximately the same; and if he will make a statement. [89725]

Mr. Vaz: Of those areas where the magistrates courts committee is approximately the same as the police authority area, there is one area where the same individual is chairman of both the police authority and magistrates court committee.

CABINET OFFICE

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87273]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government is committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisals for Equal Treatment published in November 1998 commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

Application of guidance is the responsibility of individual Departments. Within this Department we are making use of consultation, research projects and desegregated statistics to identify the impact of policy upon women.

The only piece of legislation that this Department is responsible for in the current session is the House of Lords Bill.

Details of our consultation document "Reform of the House of Lords" were published in the Women's National Commission Briefing, which was issued to their 50 full and 33 associate members on 1 April 1999. Some requests for the document were received, but no further representations.

The present under-representation of certain elements of our society within the House of Lords is an issue that needs to be rectified. As a first, self-contained, step we intend to remove the rights of hereditary peers to sit and vote in the House of Lords. We are determined to remove the hereditary peers from the House of Lords because we simply do not accept, as a matter of principle, that in social, economic or, above all, by gender or ethnic origin the hereditary peers can reasonably be considered to be representative of the people of the country. Women are grossly under-represented in the House of Lords; they constitute just 2.5 per cent. of the hereditary peers.

The Royal Commission on the reform of the House of Lords will report back at the end of this year with recommendations for wide-ranging reform of the House of Lords. It will address the role that a fully reformed House should fulfil and it will consider how to bring the best possible range of representatives into the second chamber, whether by direct or indirect election, nomination or a combination of these methods.

A nominated, or partly nominated, chamber has the advantage of widening the possible range of representation. Gender, ethnicity, region, age—all these areas can be represented within a chamber that includes an element of nomination.

Statutory Instruments

Dr. Fox: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what percentage of statutory instruments introduced by his Department into Parliament in (a) 1998, (b) 1992, (c) 1985 and (d) 1973 had the European Union as their legislative source. [89168]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The total number of statutory instruments (SIs) registered as General Instruments in 1998, 1992, 1985 and 1973 is listed in the table. I have indicated the number of SIs which were made by my Department and its predecessors to comply with European Community obligations.

1992	1,692	0
1985	1,204	0
1973	1,260	0

Older People (Public Services)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) what estimate he has made of the number of older people who have received improved public services as a result of the first year of the Better Government for Older People Programme; [90068]

(2) how many copies of "Making it Happen", the report of the first year of the Better Government for Older People Programme have been produced; at what cost; and to whom unsolicited copies have been sent; [90063]

(3) if he will list the improvements made to public services as a result of the first year of the Better Government for Older People Programme; [90067]

(4) what was the cost to public funds of the first year of the Better Government for Older People Programme. [90069]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Better Government for Older People Programme (BGOP) began in April 1998 and runs until April 2000. It is steered by a partnership led by the Cabinet Office and supported by Age Concern, Anchor Trust, the Carnegie Third Age Programme, Help the Aged, the Local Government Association and the Warwick University Local Authorities Research Consortium. It is an important part of the drive to modernise government so that public services are better equipped for the 21st Century. The Modernising Government White Paper sets as one of its targets that, by the end of the year 2000, older people should benefit from joined up services and integrated planning in at least half our local authorities.

Older people represent a significant and growing proportion of the population. For example, there are currently 10.5 million people over state pension age in the UK. This figure is expected to have increased to around 15 million by 2040, by which date 24 per cent. of the UK's population—the highest percentage in the EU—will be 60 or over. All these people, and many others, are the potential beneficiaries of the BGOP Programme.

Evaluation is an ongoing and integral part of BGOP. We will publish the results when the Programme comes to an end. Older people are already beginning to feel the benefit of improvements achieved at the local level by the 28 pilot projects, many examples of which are featured in "Making It Happen", the report of the first year of the BGOP Programme. But by far the biggest group of potential beneficiaries is those who will experience better-designed and delivered public services as a result of learning from the pilot projects.

BGOP's Learning Network brings together older people, the pilots and other partners in the Programme as well as local authorities. Its role is to help examine what does and does not work in relation to public services used by older people. It will inform the development of good practice and new models for better service delivery in the future. It links, through the Cabinet Office and the Inter-Ministerial Group on Older People to central government.

7,000 copies of "Making It Happen" have been printed at a cost of £9,925. Copies are being sent to all MPs, party leaders in the House of Lords, local authority chief executives, the pilot projects, all members of BGOP's Learning Network and others who have asked to be kept informed of developments. We are doing this to spread good practice, raise awareness and keep Parliament informed about the Programme.

As one of the six partner organisations steering the Programme, the Cabinet Office provides £51,000 per annum to support the work of the Programme's Core Team, which co-ordinates its activities. Other Departments making substantial contributions include £154,000 from the Home Office, £30,000 from the Department for Education and Employment and £30,000 from the Health Education Authority. Further contributions and support come from the other Programme partners, the 28 local authorities leading the pilots and their partner organisations. The programme raises additional funds from charging local authorities for membership of the Learning Network.

The overall cost of the Programme (including contributions from partner organisations) is estimated to be around £750,000 in the 1998–99 financial year. This represents an excellent investment in ensuring that older people receive in the future the improved public services they deserve.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89986]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Class Sizes

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the annual cost of reducing class sizes to 25 for all primary school children. [89375]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have estimated that the cost would be around £3 billion, made up of about £1 billion a year for extra teachers and around £2 billion for the capital investment required. Eventual costs would depend on a range of factors affecting implementation, including the results of local consultation, the availability of existing accommodation and parental preference.

Archaeology

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to develop NVQs in archaeological studies. [89401]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 2 July 1999]: The development and maintenance of NVQs is undertaken by National Training Organisations. Since April 1998 archaeology has been the responsibility of the Cultural Heritage NTO. It was previously covered by the environmental lead body, COSQUEC. The first NVQs, accredited in 1994, were removed in 1998 from the national framework by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) as there was very low take up.

The Cultural Heritage NTO is waiting for the findings of an archaeological training needs study called "Profiling the profession", being undertaken by the Archaeological Training Forum, before making a new case for NVQs. The report is expected in autumn 1999.

New Deal

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the national minimum wage on the costs to employers of New Deal recruits. [89422]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 2 July 1999]: From April 1998 to end of March 1999, the monthly average of New Deal participants entering jobs was 7,600. During April 1999, after the introduction of the national minimum wage, 12,400 entered jobs.

As part of the national evaluations of New Deal for Young People and New Deal for the Long Term Unemployed we are carrying out a survey of participating employers. This will include questions on the wages being paid to New Deal employees (for example gross starting pay; hourly rate; most recent gross pay; whether or not the wages are the same as for the previous job holder and why not). Any references by employers to the national minimum wage and its impact will be recorded. The survey is taking place in the autumn of this year and will involve face-to-face interviews with 1,500 participating employers.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the numbers of participants in New Deal programmes who have not obtained a job after they have completed their participation. [89415]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 2 July 1999]: The information is available from the published Government Statistical Service statistics. They show that between January 1998 and April 1999 32,000 people left New Deal for Young People for known destination other than jobs. An additional 49,420 left for an unknown destinations. However, a recently published study reports on a survey of a sample of those leaving New Deal for unrecorded destinations between April and August 1998. Of all those who responded to the survey, 43 per cent. stated they had left New Deal to go into paid employment.

Sure Start

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made with the Trailblazer Round of the Sure Start programme. [90595]

Ms Jowell: Today, my right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for Education and Employment announced a further 30 Sure Start trailblazers. They are part of the first round of a £450 million investment over 3 years in 250 local programmes across England. Sure Start will combine health care, good quality early learning and family support services to improve life chances of under fours in areas of disadvantage, so that children are ready to thrive at school.

The 30 trailblazers announced today are based in:

Blackburn with Darwen, Blackpool, Bradford, Copeland, Derby, Doncaster, Enfield, Fenland, Great Yarmouth, Greenwich, Halton, Hastings, Knowsley, Mansfield, Newham, North East Lincolnshire, Norwich, Oldham, Penwith, Plymouth, Redcar and Cleveland, Sandwell, Sedgemoor, Southampton, Stoke-on-Trent, Telford and Wrekin, Thurrock, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest, Wolverhampton.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in national insurance contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88861]

Mr. Timms: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in the main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Department of Social Security will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, we are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is, therefore, not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Department of Social Security.

Tax-benefit Models

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish tax-benefit model tables under the system operating when the working families tax credit is introduced for a lone mother with two children aged under 11, where her earnings are (a) nil, (b) £3 per hour and (c) £3.60 per hour, where, if she is an earner, she works for (i) five hours, (ii) 10 hours, (iii) 15 hours, (iv) 20 hours, (v) 25 hours, (vi) 30 hours, (vii) 35 hours, (viii) 40 hours, (ix) 45 hours and (x) 50 hours, where she has to pay average council house rent and council tax, and where, if she is an earner, she has child care costs of (A) £20, (B) £30, (C) £40, (D) £50 and (E) £60; [89313]

(2) if he will publish tax-benefit model tables under the existing system for a lone mother with two children aged under 11, where her earnings are (a) nil, (b) £3 per hour and (c) £3.60 per hour, where, if she is an earner, she works for (i) five hours, (ii) 10 hours, (iii) 15 hours, (iv) 20 hours, (v) 25 hours, (vi) 30 hours, (vii) 35 hours, (viii) 40 hours, (ix) 45 hours and (x) 50 hours, where she has to pay average council house rent and council tax, and where, if she is an earner, she has child care costs of (A) £20, (B) £30, (C) £40, (D) £50 and (E) £60; [89297]

(3) if he will publish tax-benefit model tables under the system operating when the working families tax credit is introduced for a married couple with two children aged under 11, with average council house rent and council tax, where there is (a) no earner, (b) one earner on £3 per hour and (c) one earner on £3.60 per hour and where, if there is an earner, he works for (i) five hours, (ii) 10 hours, (iii) 15 hours, (iv) 20 hours, (v) 25 hours, (vi) 30 hours, (vii) 35 hours, (viii) 40 hours, (ix) 45 hours and (x) 50 hours. [89309]

Angela Eagle: The information has been placed in the Library.

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many meetings of the JCC he has attended. [89281]

Mr. Darling: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 5 July 1999, Official Report, columns 362–63.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 March 1999, Official Report, column 882, on disabled people, when he expects to take a decision on the need for a take-up campaign for disability benefits. [89378]

Mr. Bayley: We have no plans for a take-up campaign at the present time. However, the potential take-up of benefits is increased through greater public confidence about decisions on entitlement, and we continue to work with disability organisations to improve the administration of Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance, and to ensure that decisions about entitlement are right at the outset and are kept correct.

Non-working Parents

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the position under the social security system of women who stay at home in order to look after children. [89889]

Angela Eagle: We recognise the need to provide practical support to help parents do their best for their children. That is why we have put into place a series of measures which open up choices for parents, including the highest ever increase in Child Benefit, the New Deal for Lone Parents, the National Childcare Strategy and the Working Families Tax Credit (including the child care tax credit).

In addition, our plans for the Second State Pension will build on safeguards already offered by the Home Responsibilities Protection scheme to help those whose work records are interrupted by caring responsibilities build up a worthwhile retirement income.

For women who stay at home to look after their children access to contributory benefits is based on their own or, as appropriate, their husband's national insurance record and the ability to satisfy the benefit entitlement conditions. Income related benefits will be based on the needs and income of the family unit.

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to support parents who remain at home to look after their children by paying a benefit directly to the parent. [89880]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to pay a benefit direct to a parent for remaining at home to care for a child other than the provisions already in place to support lone parents and parents of children with disabilities.

We have a role in ensuring that all families have an adequate level of income, whether in work or out of work. We have put into place a series of improvements and changes to benefits which support all families and which target families with lower incomes in particular. We have increased Child Benefit by the largest ever amount, we are introducing the Working Families Tax Credit with its integral child care tax credit (and which can be paid directly to the carer where a couple choose) and we are bringing in the Children's Tax Credit from 2001 which will be worth up to £416 a year for taxpaying families with children.

Housewives

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to treat housewives as independent individuals for social security purposes. [89888]

Angela Eagle: Women are already treated as independent individuals for most contributory benefit purposes (apart from Widow's Benefit or where an addition for an adult dependant is being claimed). Within the income related benefits we target benefit on those in greatest need by looking at the family unit. A couple is treated as a single unit and benefit calculated on the basis of the couple's needs and resources.

SCOTLAND

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in Scotland to date have received compensation under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. [89160]

Mr. Bayley: I have been asked to reply.

Sixty children who were vaccinated in Scotland have received payment under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Information on the number of children currently living in Scotland who have received payments under the Act is not available.

The payments are neither compensation nor an interim payment. They are designed to ease the present and future burdens of those suffering from vaccine damage and their families.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from her Department in attendance; if she will list the number of times each met; if she will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if she will make a statement. [88485]

Clare Short: To answer the question in the format requested would be subject to the disproportionate cost rule. In general, UKREP attend most EC working group meetings. The need for DFID staff participation is decided according to the agenda for each meeting.

Listed are the working groups with which DFID are most closely involved and the usual frequency of meetings:

Working Group	Frequency
Development Co-operation	Weekly
ACPFIN	Monthly
Food Aid Post Lome	Meeting about twice per week during current treaty negotiations. At other times meetings would be quarterly
ACP Working Group	Monthly
GSP	Quarterly

This Department also follows the outcome of a range of other working groups on subjects that have a bearing on DFID responsibilities, as below:

Asia and Oceania

Central Europe

Eastern Europe and Central Asia

Asia/Latin America

Maghreb/Mashraq

Western Balkans.

In addition, DFID staff also attend a number of EC management committee meetings chaired by the Commission covering EC programme/project management issues including European Development Fund (EDF) and the Asia Latin America, Mediterranean, Phare, Tacis, Humanitarian Aid and Food Aid programmes.

Sudan

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on what assistance the Government are giving to support a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Sudan. [90050]

Clare Short: We are pressing throughout the international system for more effort towards a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Sudan. We are working in particular with the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and with the IGAD Partners Forum.

At the latest meeting of the IGAD Partners Forum on 10 March in Oslo, proposals for a special envoy and dedicated secretariat to maintain a sustained and accelerated peace negotiation were accepted in principle. We are pursuing the implementation of these proposals before the next IGAD peace talks take place between the Government of Sudan and the SPLA; these are scheduled for 18–23 July.

Child Labour

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries with which her Department held discussions in 1998 with regard to the use of child labour for making goods imported into the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [89925]

Clare Short: There have been no direct bilateral discussions, but throughout 1998 and 1999, the Government has actively participated in joint discussions with other members of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) on the causes of child labour and how best to combat it. We have also continuously supported the ILO's International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour (IPEC), and the adoption of the new International Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labour. The Convention, adopted by consensus at the International Labour Conference in June this year, aims to put an end to the intolerable exploitation of children in hazardous work, conditions of slavery, and practices similar to slavery.

Coral and Mangrove Ecosystems

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the conclusions of the conference at London Zoo on 29 to 30 June relating to overseas dependent territories on the importance for poor people of coral and mangrove ecosystems. [89930]

Clare Short: The Conference considered environmental issues in the UK Overseas Territories and highlighted the diversity of natural resources in these small island states. Coral reefs and mangrove forests are among their more threatened environments. They directly provide a range of services important to poor people, including food, income, building materials, and tourist-related employment. Mangroves and coral reefs are often the only resources to which poor people have ready access. The Conference discussed the importance of controlling the exploitation of these ecosystems at sustainable levels by engaging the coastal peoples in their management, and helping to develop alternative livelihood options. We are actively engaged in supporting such programmes in UK Overseas Territories and other island states.

HEALTH

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by his Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [87189]

Ms Jowell: The Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. Guidelines on Policy Appraisals for Equal Treatment published in November 1998 commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

Application of the guidance is the responsibility of individual Departments. The Department is in regular contact with a wide variety of voluntary organisations within the health and personal social services field, seeking views on such matters as relevant aspects of proposed legislative change and the development of general policy, including those organisations receiving funding from the Department. Although some of these organisations seek to focus exclusively upon women's issues, the large majority would reflect the more generic views of their members, including often a significant proportion of women. We are currently funding and are in regular contact with the Women's Aid Federation of England on matters of mutual interest in relation to issues of domestic violence, while we would also expect to take the views of a wide range of organisations active in the field of young or elderly people, for example, with a substantial number of women among their membership.

Cancer Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the Excellence and Equity in Cancer Care Strategy, published by the All-Party Group on Cancer. [89263]

Mr. Denham: The themes in the All-Party Group's five pledges on the excellence and equity in Cancer Care Strategy reflect the issues raised at the cancer seminar in Downing Street in May at which the Prime Minister announced a plan of action to tackle cancer and save lives. The Government are committed to improving quality of and access to cancer services and a comprehensive programme of work is in hand to tackle the issues raised at the Downing Street meeting.

Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total (a) annual budget and (b) staffing of the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service. [89366]

Mr. Denham: The total annual budget of the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service for 1999–2000 is £558,000.

The total staffing of the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service is currently 6.5 whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what performance targets have been agreed with the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service in relation to processing (a) inquiries and (b) applications. [89368]

Mr. Denham: The contract for the provision of a centralised service processing all applications seeking entry to pre-registration nursing and midwifery diploma courses was negotiated in accordance with a detailed specification, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications the Nursing and Midwifery Admissions Service deals with each year. [89367]

Mr. Denham: The number of applications varies from year to year. The number of applications differs to the number of applicants. This is because each applicant can submit up to and including four applications for different higher education institutions. The figures for applications and applicants are:

	Applications	Applicants
1997–98	50,026	20,088
1998–99[1]	94,952	33,803

[1] These are the latest figures for 1998–99. Final figures are not yet available.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase in the drug tariff to the NHS, in actual and percentage terms, of (a) Thyroxine tablets (100 mcg) per 1000, (b) Erythromycin tablets (250 mg) per 500, (c) Warfarin (5 mg) tablets per 500 and (d) chlordiazepoxide (10 mg) capsules per 500 between May 1998 and May 1999; and if he will make a statement. [89682]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is given in the table.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the control of drug tariff prices to the NHS for (a) generic drugs and (b) branded drugs. [89681]

Mr. Denham: Reimbursement prices for medicines may or may not be listed in the Drug Tariff, and are the actual or averaged list prices of one or more versions of the drugs concerned. For generics, list prices are set by the market. Branded prices are governed by the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme.

Medicinal Drugs

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (i) percentage and (ii) amount of the NHS budget was spent on medicinal drugs in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [89675]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is provided in the tables.

Fluoridation

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his Department's reviews of the effects on health of fluoridation of water; and what have been the results of these reviews. [89825]

Mr. Denham: Relevant reviews conducted by, for, or with the participation of, the Department of Health or its predecessors, are as follows:

Nutrition and bone health: with particular reference to calcium and Vitamin D. Report on Health and Social Subjects No. 49. The Stationery Office, London.

In addition, the Department and the Medical Research Council support research as appropriate. The Department also monitors and assesses the extensive published research conducted by others, and the many reviews commissioned by other groups, including the World Health Organisation. We agree with the conclusions of Sir Donald Acheson's Independent Inquiry into Inequalities in Health (conducted for the Department, and published in 1998) that "Fluoridation of the public water supply has been shown to reduce caries ... [and] ... should decrease inequalities in dental caries ... The balance of scientific evidence is against harmful effects on health of fluoridation."

However, we are not complacent and in the Public Health White Paper published on 6 July we announced that we have commissioned an up-to-date scientific review of fluoride and health. If the review confirms that the health benefits of fluoridation are considerable and that there are no significant risks, we intend to introduce an obligation on water companies to fluoridate where there is strong local support for doing so.

Broomfield Hospital, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute beds there are currently at Broomfield hospital, Chelmsford; and how many there will be in October. [90002]

Mr. Denham: There are currently 568 acute beds at Broomfield hospital, including intensive care, cardiac care and the burns unit. The current ward closure proposals, which form part of the development plan for Mid Essex Hospital Services National Health Service Trust, will be discussed fully at a public meeting being held on 22 July 1999 at 7.30 pm in the Social Hall at St. John's hospital, Chelmsford. Until this meeting has taken place, it would not be appropriate to comment on the future provision of acute beds at Broomfield hospital.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish his response to the report of the Centre for Policy on Ageing on national required standards for residential and nursing homes for older people. [90070]

Mr. Hutton: We are currently considering the Centre for Policy on Ageing's report setting out their proposals for national regulatory standards for older people in care homes. We will be issuing the CPA's proposed standards to a wide range of organisations and individuals for consultation nationally in the summer.

We will carefully consider all the comments we receive on the CPA's report before finalising and publishing the standards and the arrangements for implementing them.

Smallpox

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the retention of samples of smallpox-related material. [88274]

Ms Jowell [pursuant to her reply, 6 July 1999, c. 494]: The recently published report by the United States of America Institute of Medicine presents strong arguments for the retention of smallpox stocks, which we accept. Since the eradication of naturally occurring smallpox over 20 years ago, very few people have been immunised against smallpox. It is vital before the virus stocks are destroyed that investigations of the genetic structure and pathogenesis of smallpox are carried out to ensure that we have all the information we need to protect the population should smallpox re-emerge as a threat in the future. We are advised that this work requires the retention of the smallpox vaccine stocks and that their retention will also allow the development of effective anti-viral treatments and new vaccines.

We will be working with the World Health Organisation to develop and take forward research on these issues.

WALES

European Elections

14. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the arrangements for the European elections in Wales. [88536]

Mr. Hain: As Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales I had responsibility for this matter until 1 July.

We continued to pursue the objectives identified in Pathway to Prosperity—our new economic agenda for Wales. We asked the Welsh Development Agency to develop a Wales Entrepreneurship Action Plan; we strengthened Business Connect; established the Rural Partnership; made RSA more accessible, improved the flow of capital and advisory services to companies. Our aim in doing all this was to encourage and support more growth and development in existing companies and create more new enterprises.

Since last Thursday these responsibilities have passed to the National Assembly for Wales.

GPs

26. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the National Assembly on measures to encourage more general practitioners to practise in the valleys of south Wales. [88548]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I have had no such discussions. This is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Livestock Industry

28. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the Welsh livestock industry. [88550]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: As Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State I had responsibility for this matter until 1 July. We took a number of initiatives, either unilaterally or jointly with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to address the difficulties faced by the livestock sector. We provide:

- £12 million aid for Welsh cattle and sheep farmers in December 1997.
- Almost £15 million extra for HLCA claimants in Wales in November 1998.
- Publication in March 1999 of industry-led Action Plans for the Lamb and Beef, Dairy and Organic sectors.
- Complete deferral for this year of the Specified Risk Material inspection costs—a saving of £2.5 million for Welsh farmers.

Since last Thursday these responsibilities have passed to the National Assembly for Wales. The First Secretary and his Cabinet colleagues will be happy to brief Members of the House of Commons on the Assembly's work.

School Funding

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to have discussions with the Assembly Secretary for Education up to age 16 about funding of schools in Wales. [88532]

Mr. Hain: I have had discussions with the Education Secretary on this and other matters but this is now a matter for the National Assembly.

Press Releases

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the translation of press releases from Government Departments into the Welsh language. [89679]

Mr. Michael: This is a matter for individual Departments. In the past, I made clear the willingness of my Department to advise on such matters. I have written to colleagues underlining the importance of this matter, and the advice which is available to Departments from the Welsh Language Board. I am pleased to see that a number of Departments have prepared Welsh language schemes which set out their policy on the use of Welsh in press notices.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with representatives of livestock farms in Wales to discuss progress on the lifting of the beef export ban. [88529]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I have had many such discussions. Beef farmers in Wales have paid a heavy price for the incompetence of the previous Government. I have been pleased to support my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in sorting out this mess.

This is now a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

DEFENCE

- To achieve 5 or more GCSE passes at grades A* to C; 1999–2000 target is 86 per cent.
- To achieve 88 per cent. of A level passes at grades A to E.
- To achieve 3 or more A level passes at grades A to E; 1999–2000 target is 80 per cent.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 7 July. [88554]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I will have further such meetings later today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his special advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89983]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive governments.

Balkans (EU Appointments)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made on EU appointments in connection with the Balkans region; and if he will make a statement. [90120]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully supported the candidature of the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) for the post of the United Nations Secretary-General's Special Representative in Kosovo. The UNSG has now appointed Mr. Bernard Kouchner to the post: he will have our full support as he carries out his important duties. Mr. Joly Dixon, a UK national working for the European Commission, has been appointed Deputy Special Representative responsible for reconstruction in Kosovo.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to reply to the letter written by the hon. Member for Totnes on 29 May about Mr. and Mrs. Michael Perkins of Chillington, Kingsbridge, South Devon. [90105]

Mr. Hoon: The hon. Member's letter to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary was received in the Foreign and Commonwealth office on 18 June. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary will reply shortly.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 15 March, 22 April and 27 May, with regard to Mrs. J. Otakoro, from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton. [89957]

Mr. Hoon: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied to my right hon. Friend's letters on 8 June 1999.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) of 22 June 1999, Official Report, columns 354–55, on qualified majority voting, when the decision to hold a European Union Inter-Governmental Conference in 2000 was made; what are the main headings and items to be considered at that conference; and what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to publicise the conference. [89393]

Ms Quin: The decision to hold an Inter-Governmental conference (IGC) in 2000 was made at the Cologne European Council on 3–4 June. The items to be considered are set out in the Presidency conclusions, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reported on the decision to hold the Conference in his Statement to the House of 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 463–79. The Government will ensure that Parliament is kept fully informed of developments in the IGC.

Internal Histories

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 116, for what reason the titles of internal histories remain classified; what the level of classification is; and how many internal histories exist. [89808]

Mr. Hoon: Titles of internal histories less than 30 years old which have not yet been cleared for release or publication remain confidential, because to disclose such information would be premature in relation to publication plans under Exemption 10 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The level of classifications vary and include up to Secret. The number of internal histories held by the FCO is not recorded centrally. So far 15 have been identified.

European Budget

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 197, concerning activities authorised under lines 3706 and 3708 of the EU budget, when he will deposit the substantive reply in the Library. [89810]

Ms Quin: I wrote to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Borders (Mr. Maclean) on this subject on 22 March. Through an administration error, copies of my letter were not deposited in the Libraries of each House at the time. I have now arranged for copies to be sent.

Debriefing (Ambassador)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions

Ministers from his Department have debriefed ambassadors from British business; if such ambassadors are required to declare this position in meetings with foreign representatives of Government; if Government policy is discussed; and if he will make a statement. [89821]

Mr. Hoon: The Ambassadors for British Business attended a working meeting with Ministers in July 1998.

When making appointments for the Ambassadors for British Business our overseas posts make clear to interlocutors their status.

The Ambassadors for British Business are provided with briefing on British government policy for them to use as they feel appropriate. They are, however, free to express their own views during their Ambassador for British Business engagements. The objective of their role is to promote the UK's wider British Commercial interests drawing on their own experience and expertise.

Ethiopia and Eritrea

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking to encourage a settlement of the border dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea and a cessation of the deportations between the two countries; and if he will make a statement. [89861]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made frequent and regular representations to the Governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea, at all levels, both bilaterally and through the European Union. Our message has been clear: both sides must stop fighting immediately and implement the OAU Framework peace proposals.

We have urged both sides to respect the rights of civilian populations. The Ethiopian Government have assured us that their policy of expulsion of Eritreans has now stopped. The Eritrean Government maintain that the Ethiopians leaving Eritrea have done so voluntarily. I discussed the situation with OAU Secretary-General Salim Salim on 28 May and underlined our continued support for the OAU Framework peace proposals.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that when a Minister of his Department next visits Turkey he or she discusses with the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Turkey the lack of response to letters that have been sent to him by the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, regarding the decision taken by the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Mrs. Loizidou v. Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [89817]

Ms Quin: We continue to make clear to Turkey, including in the Council of Europe's Committee of Ministers' Deputies, the need to respect the European Court of Human Rights' judgment in the case of Loizidou v. Turkey. We supported the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers to write to the Turkish Foreign Minister on 22 June requesting clarification from Turkey on how it intends to implement the judgment. We look forward to his response, and will be interested to hear what progress is being made on the issue when we next meet at Ministerial level.

Burma

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to improve the conditions of ethnic minorities in Burma. [89937]

Mr. Hoon: We take every opportunity to try to improve the conditions of ethnic minorities in Burma. We raise concerns both here and in Rangoon directly with the regime, most recently about repression in Kayah and Chin States. We are also active in international forums, for example co-sponsoring UN resolutions which put pressure on the regime to improve the human rights situation. We were instrumental in the adoption of a resolution by the International Labour Conference on 17 June which stated that Burma's behaviour, notably the continued use of forced labour (a major burden on ethnic minorities), was incompatible with ILO membership. And we support the work of the Burma Consortium for those who have fled regime repression.

Kashmir

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what influence he is bringing to bear on behalf of the UK Government to stop the violence in Kashmir. [89893]

Mr. Hoon: As longstanding friends of Pakistan and India, we are deeply concerned by the continuing fighting in the Kargil sector of Jammu and Kashmir following armed infiltration across the Line of Control. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary and I, and our High Commissions in Islamabad and New Delhi, have urged both countries to work to lower tensions and to refrain from action which might escalate the fighting. We have reinforced our concerns in the EU statements of 27 May and 24 June and the conclusions on G8 Foreign Ministers on 31 May and heads of Government on 19 June.

MOX Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1999, Official Report, column 116, on MOX shipments, if he will place that advice in the Library. [89814]

Mr. Hoon: The Government's position on this matter was recently re-examined by the DTI in the course of preparing a response to a letter on the same subject which my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) sent to my colleague the Minister for Energy and Industry. The Minister's reply to my hon. Friend for Northfield sets out the detailed conclusions reached and reflects the advice of the UK Safeguards Office. This was the same advice as that on which I based my earlier statement. A copy of that reply has now been placed in the Library.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 8 July 1999

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorist Ceasefires

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the status of her review of the state of terrorist ceasefires. [87879]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State keeps the ceasefires of all paramilitary organisations under continuous review. The judgment needs to be made in the round, taking into account all relevant information including the advice she receives regularly from her security advisers.

Drumcree

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards solving the Drumcree Church parade difficulties. [87878]

Mr. Ingram: Every effort has been made by both the British and Irish Governments to reach a satisfactory resolution to the Drumcree dispute. No such resolution has yet been reached, but our efforts continue. The decision taken by the Parades Commission to reroute the planned parade by Portadown LOL District is a legal one, and I am pleased to note that on Sunday 4 July the marchers complied with the conditions imposed by the Parades Commission.

Barry Mason

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) of 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 326, on Barry Mason, what action she plans to take; and if she will make a statement. [87765]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 22 June 1999]: The Royal Ulster Constabulary are presently liaising with the West Midland police to see if there are any lines of inquiry arising from the claims made by Barry Mason. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to take any action herself.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what legislation he plans to introduce to implement his proposed reforms of the Post Office. [90730]

Mr. Byers: Much of the package of reforms for the Post Office that I have set out in the White Paper I have published today can be implemented without any change in the law. But I propose three pieces of legislation to complete the reform package:

First, I am today laying an order under Section 69 of the British Telecommunications Act 1981 to reduce the Post Office monopoly to letters for which the post is not more than 50 pence (or which do not weigh more than 150 grams). The new limits will have effect from 1 April 2000. This will supersede the Order made in 1981 to fix the monopoly limit to items costing less than £1 for a period of 25 years, ending in 2006.

Secondly, I am today also making available the draft of a Regulation I propose to make shortly under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 to implement the European Union Postal Services Directive on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services. As the intention of the Directive is, inter alia, to provide a regulatory framework for postal services and the creation of a national regulatory authority, and to establish common rules for the provision of a universal postal service, the proposed Regulation will establish a new regulatory regime, designating the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and a new Postal Services Commission, that will assume its duties from 1 April 2000, as the national regulatory authorities for the postal sector in the United Kingdom, and to amend the Post Office Act 1969 so as to define in the legislation the minimum levels of service to be provided by the Post Office.

Thirdly, as soon as Parliamentary time permits, I will bring forward primary legislation to consolidate the reform of the Post Office and the postal market. The Bill will ensure that the Post Office can take full and certain advantage of the commercial freedoms proposed in the package; convert the Post Office into a plc to underline the commercialisation of the business (though the legislation will not provide for any disposal of shares without further Parliamentary approval, and in particular no share sale will be possible without further primary legislation); clarify and consolidate the independent regulatory and consumer representative framework, putting it on a basis similar to that for the private utilities; and enable any reduction in the Post Office monopoly to be put on a permanent (rather than temporary) basis.

Power Stations

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce further decisions on power station proposals currently with his Department. [90734]

Mr. Battle: I have today given directions under Section 14 (3) of the Energy Act 1976 to Southern Electric and Sabre Power not to proceed with a number of their gas-fired schemes. The schemes affected are Southern Electric's mini power plants (49 MW) at Loudwater, Nr High Wycombe and Quidhampton, Salisbury and Sabre Power's mini power plants (50 MW) at Hirwan, Rhondda and Bridgwater, Somerset. These decisions have been taken in accordance with the policy set out in the White Paper entitled "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071).

Decisions on other proposals under consideration will be announced in due course.

Copies of the Press Notice and the relevant decision letters are being placed in the Library of the House.

EU Takeovers Directive

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the legislative changes required by the proposed EU Takeovers Directive. [90092]

Dr. Howells: It would not be possible to say, until the Directive had been finally adopted by the Council and the European Parliament, following its consideration for the second time by the European Parliament under the co-decision procedure, precisely what legislative changes would be required to implement the Directive. However, it is likely that such legislation would formally designate the supervisory body which would be responsible in the UK for regulating takeovers (this could be a private body such as the Takeover Panel). In addition, some basic aspects of the regulatory framework set out in the Directive—such as the general principles which are presently included in Article 3—would no doubt have to be incorporated into legislation.

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the United Kingdom patents which have been (a) applied for and (b) granted since 18 May 1998 in respect of genetically engineered animals and processes for creating such animals. [89932]

Dr. Howells: I can only give information about patent applications which have been published. Prior to publication such information is confidential. There have been a total of three applications filed under the Patents Act 1977 and published since 18 May 1998 relating to genetically engineered animals and processes for preparing them. Patent No. GB 2331301 relates to a transgenic mammal for use as a model in the treatment of Alzheimer's disease, Patent No. GB 2327679 relates to transgenic fish and Patent No. GB 2331751 relates to methods of cloning animal embryos. Only Patent No. GB 2327679 has so far been granted.

Three other patents have been granted since 18 May 1998. They are Patent No. GB 2312899 for transgenic mammals useful as models for the treatment of bone disorders, GB 2291646 which relates to transgenic fish transformed with growth hormone and GB 228807 which relates to mammals transformed with a gene encoding a neurotoxin.

This information covers only applications filed at the UK Patent Office and does not include applications filed at the European Patent Office and which may have the legal effect of UK patents when granted by that Office.

EU Artists' Resale Right Directive

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the EU Artists' Resale Right Directive. [90089]

Dr. Howells: The Government are concerned that the current proposal would drive sales out of the EU and hit our art market far harder than others, while bringing little or no benefit to the majority of artists. We therefore welcome the postponement of a decision on the draft Directive by the 21 June Internal Market Council to allow more time for discussions to continue and see if a way forward can be found to overcome the very substantial difficulties the UK and others still see with it.

Weights and Measures

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what meetings he has had with members of the National Market Traders Federation to discuss whether to seek an extension to the derogation permitting loose from bulk produce to be sold in imperial only measures. [90096]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 July 1999]: I have had no specific meetings with the National Market Traders Federation to discuss metrication but I met representatives of the Federation at a reception in the House of Commons on 10 May 1999. The Federation had previously submitted written representations to me concerning the derogation.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the likelihood of the United States adopting metric measurements as the authorised units for pre-packaged food by 31 December 2009. [90101]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 July 1999]: As part of the US metrication programme, pre-packaged goods (foods and non-foods) marketed in the USA are already required to be marked with an indication of quantity in metric and US customary units. The European Commission is in discussion with the US Government about permitting indications of quantity to be given only in metric units by 2009.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the cost to (a) market traders, (b) delicatessens and (c) other retailers arising from the expiry of the derogation permitting loose from bulk produce to be sold using imperial measures only. [90103]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 July 1999]: The DTI published a compliance cost assessment when the legislation to phase in the gram and the kilogram was made in 1994. The assessment identified the conversion or replacement of weighing machines as the main cost for traders. At today's prices, according to the United Kingdom Weighing Federation, the average cost of a conversion is about £100 and the cost of a new weighing machine starts at about £450. According to the Federation, 80 per cent. of machines should be capable of conversion. The cost of a set of metric weights is about £50.

If, as the Government expect, the European Commission's proposal to permit dual indications in metric and non-metric units until 31 December 2009 is adopted, weighing machines that show metric and imperial units will not have to be converted or replaced if the imperial units are not larger than the metric ones.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he made to the European Commission calling for it to extend the derogation permitting loose from bulk produce to be sold using imperial measures only; and what reasons underlie his policy on making such representations. [90095]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 July 1999]: The Government have not made any representations to the European Commission to extend the derogation in Directive 80/181/EEC on units of measurement, under which the ounce and the pound may be used until 31 December 1999 as the legal units in the UK for goods sold loose from bulk and weighed at the point of sale.

I intend reporting to Parliament in the near future concerning the adoption of metric units in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the European Union's Trade Commissioner, and whether such discussions have included the expiry of the derogation permitting loose from bulk produce to be sold using imperial measures only. [90100]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 July 1999]: The Government have not discussed the derogation for goods sold loose with Members of the European Commission.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures his Department has taken to inform market traders of the consequences of the expiry of the derogation permitting loose from bulk produce to be sold using only imperial measures; and what was the cost of such measures. [90102]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 July 1999]: The DTI is putting together a programme of measures to inform and advise small traders and their customers about using the gram and kilogram for goods sold loose. The projected cost of the programme is £400,000.

Financial Failure

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish his Department's internal report on reducing the stigma of financial failure. [90292]

Dr. Howells: When additional work has been undertaken in order to further develop the areas identified by officials a Consultation Document will be published, probably during the coming winter, 1999–2000.

Insolvency

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Government reviews and reports currently being conducted into reform of the insolvency laws. [90293]

Dr. Howells: Two reviews of Insolvency Law and Practice were announced in the Competitiveness White Paper. The first was an internal review of insolvency (and particularly bankruptcy) law and the extent to which it contributed to the stigma of failure and inhibited enterprise. Officials reported to Ministers on 30 April 1999, and work to further develop the ideas generated is underway. The second review is a joint DTI/HM Treasury Review of Company Rescue Mechanisms, the Terms of Reference of which were announced on 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 580. That review will now report by the end of 1999.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to sell a 49 per cent. stake in British Nuclear Fuels Limited. [90299]

Mr. Battle: I hope to be able to make an announcement about the future of BNFL shortly.

Disqualified Directors

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to prevent disqualified company directors becoming involved with new companies. [90094]

Dr. Howells: Action is taken by a combination of active monitoring of the appointment of new directors by Companies House and of the enforcement of disqualification law by the Insolvency Service.

Companies House records details of all disqualified directors in a public register and since 1995 has been taking continuous steps to improve the accuracy of, and access to, the register. It has also been carrying out checks to ensure that disqualified directors resign their directorships in active companies. It also routinely checks that new directors of companies notified to it are not already disqualified.

In addition, the Insolvency Service—through Official Receivers and insolvency practitioners—reports contraventions of disqualification orders for prosecution; liaises with central and local government departments and agencies which may identify breaches in the course of their own contacts with businesses; and has set up a telephone hotline for the public and business to report disqualified directors who continue to act while banned.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the climate change levy to his Department and (b) the savings from the reduction in national insurance contributions that will occur when it is introduced. [88862]

Mr. Spellar: The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in main rate of employers' National Insurance Contributions on the Ministry of Defence will depend on the rates of climate change levy. The final rates of climate change levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

In addition, the Government are still considering a number of detailed issues on the tax treatment of different energy products which could have a significant impact in some instances. It is, therefore, not possible to give definitive figures about the impact of the climate change levy on the Ministry of Defence.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment he has made of the economic impact of the climate change levy on those chemical industries which are based on the electrolysis process; and if he will make a statement; [88198]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the number of extra jobs which will be created as a result of the reduction in employers' National Insurance Contributions and (b) the extent of job losses in manufacturing industry following the introduction of the climate change levy; and if he will make a statement. [88406]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The climate change levy is estimated to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010, thereby making a very significant contribution to meeting the Government's legally-binding target for reducing greenhouse gas emissions set under the Kyoto Protocol, and its domestic coal of a 20 per cent. cut in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010.

The climate change levy will entail no increase in the overall burden of tax on business as the revenue will be fully recycled via a 0.5 percentage point cut in employer National Insurance Contributions. Business will also benefit from an additional £50 million for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, like solar and wind power.

Following Lord Marshall's recommendations, and the Government's Statement of Intent on Environmental Taxation, the Government recognises the need for special consideration to be given to energy intensive industries given their energy usage and exposure to international competition. Consequently, significantly lower rates of tax will be set for those energy intensive sectors that agree targets for improving their energy efficiency. A number of sectors including the aluminium, iron and steel, and chemicals sectors are currently involved in those negotiations. The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in National Insurance Contributions on individual sectors will depend on the rates at which the levy is set. The final rates of the levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

The Government is keen to work with business on the detailed design and administration issues relating to the levy. HM Customs and Excise have just completed a further round of consultation on these issues and the Government is assessing these responses alongside other representations in deciding how to design the levy to maximise the environmental benefits while safeguarding competitiveness.

As the Government's climate change consultation document makes clear, all sectors of the economy will need to play their part in tackling the problem of climate change. It is not the Government's intention to introduce new taxes on domestic fuel and power, for social policy reasons. However, there are a number of measures in place to encourage energy efficiency in households, including the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme. These measures are set out in the climate change consultation document and will form part of the climate change strategy to be published later this year.

The UK is not alone in having to meet targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, or in using economic instruments to do so. Since 1990, seven EU countries have introduced explicit taxes on the carbon or energy content of fuels, including most recently, the 'Eco-Tax' introduced by the German Government. On current projections, most OECD countries will have to introduce new measures of one form or another to meet their Kyoto obligations.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89692]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 July 1999]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

RMAS Arrochar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the RMAS Arrochar, based in Portsmouth, is being disposed of. [89968]

Mr. Spellar: The Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service, RMAS, Naval Armament Vessels are employed primarily for freighting armament stores and other dry cargo.

A reduction in the freighting task as a result of the Strategic Defence Review, together with a decrease in the requirement to transport munitions for British forces in Germany, has cut the total volume of routine work to a level which can satisfactorily be met by using one vessel.

An independent study is being undertaken to assess the material state of the two vessels, RMAS Arrochar and RMAS Kinterbury, before we decide which vessel to retain in service.

Leeming Village

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for his Department's houses in Leeming Village; and if he will make a statement. [90085]

Mr. Spellar: Of the 32 houses in Leeming Village, 11 are currently occupied. The Defence Housing Executive (DHE) plans to release 20 of the remaining properties back to Annington Homes Ltd. next year.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Bus Lane (M4)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many buses a day use the bus lane on the M4 between the M25 and the elevated section; and how many cars a day use the same section of motorway. [88491]

Mr. Prescott: The eastbound carriageway of the M4 motorway, between junction 3 and the elevated section where the motorway reduces from 3 lanes to 2, incorporates the bus lane. Based on the first three weeks monitoring of the operation of the road since the opening of the bus lane, 450 buses a day use the bus lane and some 49,200 cars use the same section of motorway. Additionally 2,900 taxis use the bus lane and 2,400 commercial vehicles use the motorway.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from 10 Downing Street in respect of the M4 bus lane. [88636]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 29 June 1999]: I received no representations from the Prime Minister, but my Department and 10 Downing Street have discussed the improvements in traffic flow for all vehicles which have occurred.

George Green Tunnel (Wanstead)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 23 June 1999, Official Report, columns 404–05, on George Green Tunnel, how many vehicles were employed in the limited staged incident on 28 May; how many London Fire Brigade vehicles attended; and if he will place a copy of the Fire Brigade's report in the Library. [89391]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Three cars were used to simulate an accident in the eastbound bore of the tunnel and three London Fire Brigade appliances attended. The publication of the report is a matter for the Fire Brigade. I would not normally place copies of such reports in the Library but, subject to the Fire Brigade's agreement, I will send my hon. Friend a copy as soon as one is available.

Ministerial Visits

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what dates he has made official visits to the New Forest, East constituency since 2 May 1997. [89630]

Mr. Prescott: None.

Correspondence

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons he has not replied to the (a) letter dated 16 March and (b) fax dated 25 May from the hon. Member for New Forest, East. [89631]

Mr. Prescott: Because the matter was dealt with by our offices over the telephone.

Bus Passes

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that mental health service users have the same legal entitlement to local authority bus passes as physically disabled people. [89545]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Outside London, local authorities may provide concessionary travel for people who are mentally handicapped, but not for people who are mentally ill (except for those who would be refused a driving licence on medical grounds). Local authorities also have the power to provide concessionary travel for people with a number of specified physical disabilities (including those who are blind) as well as those people with a disability or injury which seriously impairs their ability to walk. In all these instances, the decision on whether to allow concessionary travel for any or all of these groups of people is a matter for the local authority.

In London, local authorities have the legal power to provide concessionary travel for people who are blind, or who have a disability or injury which seriously impairs their ability to walk.

Millennium Urban Village

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the reasons for the resignation of the architect responsible for designing the Millennium Urban Village at Greenwich; and if the sustainable aspects of conservation and design have been changed from the original project proposals. [89733]

Mr. Caborn: I cannot comment on the reasons for the resignation of HTA Architects Ltd. from the Greenwich Millennium Village project, since that is a commercial matter between HTA and its client. However, the lead architect responsible for the Village masterplan has publicly expressed his continued commitment to the scheme. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has asked English Partnerships for a full report on progress against the original aspirations for the Village, but we are confident that this exciting development will, as planned, set high standards of innovation and sustainability.

Public Footways

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to discourage parking on public footways; and if he will make a statement. [89933]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highway Code (Rule 218) makes it clear that motorists should not park on the footway or pavement as it can seriously inconvenience pedestrians, people in wheelchairs, the visually impaired and people with prams and pushchairs. Enforcement is a matter for the police under the law relating to obstruction.

Motorists should also be aware that where there are yellow line or clearway restrictions in operation, it is an offence to park on the adjacent pavement or verge.

Pavement parking is a specific offence in London, unless there is a positively signed exemption. Local authorities in London are generally responsible for enforcement of pavement parking under the Road Traffic Act 1991.

Elsewhere, local authorities can also make pavement parking a specific offence in individual streets or over a wider area by the making of traffic regulation orders and placing the appropriate signs. We are encouraging local authorities outside London to apply for decriminalised parking enforcement powers under the 1991 Act as this offers scope for them to target enforcement where it is most needed—such as pavement parking.

We also issue advice to local authorities on the use of largely self-enforcing methods, such as bollards, to prevent or deter pavement parking (Traffic Advisory Leaflet 4/93).

Refrigerants

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage the use of alternatives to HFCs in refrigeration; and if he will make a statement. [89953]

Mr. Meale: The Government do not promote one refrigerant over another but encourage business and industry to choose the safest, most environmentally acceptable and energy efficient system for each particular application.

The Government have also agreed a Declaration of Intent with the refrigeration and air conditioning industry with the aim of reducing emissions of HFCs. The Declaration recommends that the servicing, maintenance and decommissioning of equipment containing HFCs are carried out only by competent persons. It also encourages all reasonably practicable precautionary measures to minimise refrigerant leakage, and recommends that refrigerants are recovered for reuse, reclamation or disposal during servicing and prior to equipment decommissioning.

We are reviewing the effectiveness of this Declaration and the other voluntary agreements on minimising HFC emissions as part of the development of a new climate change programme to meet the UK's legally binding target of 12.5 per cent. reduction in overall greenhouse gas emissions by 2008–12, and move towards the domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions.

Wild Boar

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to designate wild boar as (a) vermin and (b) game; and if he will make a statement. [89938]

Mr. Meale: There are no plans to designate wild boar as vermin or game.

Wild boar are not protected and may be killed or taken by owners and occupiers of land using any method, e.g. shooting or trapping, which is not prohibited by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

London Transport

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will arrange for London Transport to disclose the terms regarding times, frequency and interchange arrangements sent to those invited to tender for any bus service. [89942]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for London Transport. Although they do not publish details of the invitation to tender, I understand that where changes to a bus route are proposed, London Transport do provide details in terms of the route and service frequency as part of the consultation process. If these details remain unchanged, the information will already be in the public domain.

Concessionary Fares (Schoolchildren)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to issue guidelines to local authorities regarding concessionary fares for children travelling to and from school in order to reduce the volume of school traffic at peak times. [89918]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Concessionary fares are essentially a matter for locally elected councils. However, my Department, with the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of Health, published on 30 June a booklet entitled "School travel strategies and plans—a best practice guide for local authorities". This set out many instances of steps that have been taken in different parts of the country to improve safety and reduce car use on the journey to school; it included an example of the introduction of lower fares for pupils.

North West Development Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what are (a) the name of the landlord and (b) the address of the site of the new premises to be occupied by the North West Development Agency and related activities in Penrith, Cumbria; [88767]

(2) what the terms of the lease are for the property to be occupied by English Partnerships and other North West Development Agency operations at Penrith; [88758]

(3) what assessment has been made of the comparative costs of locating North West Development Agency activities in premises (a) owned by English Partnerships in Cockermouth and (b) rented in Penrith. [88768]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Decisions on location are a matter for the North West Development Agency. I understand that the Agency has not yet taken a final decision on the location of the Penrith office. Discussions are underway with Allen Commercial Development Agency in respect of a building on the Penrith 40 Business Park at Junction 40 of the M6.

The annual rental costs and other terms of a lease are thus still under negotiation but I understand that the rental cost may be in the order of £10 per square foot. The opportunity cost of the Agency occupying the premises in Cockermouth transferred to it from English Partnership is about £4.50 per square foot.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the names of those organisations and individuals who nominated each member of the Board of the North West Development Agency. [89062]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 6 July 1999, Official Report, columns 449–50.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of officials in the North West Region in the nomination and selection of each person appointed to the Board of the North West Development Agency. [89063]

Mr. Meale: The appointment of members to the Board of the Regional Development Agencies was carried out in accordance with the Code of Practice and Guidance laid down by Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Government Offices in the Regions were involved in the sift of candidates and the interviews. Independent assessors participated at the sift and interview stages to ensure independent scrutiny of the process, and that the appointments procedures were fair and consistently applied. The final decisions on the appointments were made by Ministers.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have for a direct Channel Tunnel rail link with the north east of England. [90257]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 340–41, the commissioning of a thorough and independent review of regional Channel Tunnel services. On 17 June the consultancy firm Arthur D. Little were appointed to undertake this review, and it is underway. The review will be thorough and wide ranging in its consideration of alternative options. It will, in particular, seek to assess the regional economic and social benefits of regional Eurostar services, and will examine the proposals put forward by the Virgin Group and the report produced last year by Inter-Capital and Regional Rail Ltd. The final report is due to be submitted at the end of October, and we expect to make a statement to the House before the end of the year.

M60

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the M60 from (a) Denton to Hollinwood and (b) Hollinwood to Middleton to open. [90320]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Andrew F. Bennett, dated 8 July 1999:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Lawrie Haynes, to reply to your recent question about expected opening dates for the M60 Denton to Hollinwood and M60 Hollinwood to Middleton road contracts. I am replying in Lawrie's absence from the office.

Contract 1: Denton to Medlock (Hollinwood in your question) was awarded in 1996 as a three year contract in the then traditional form in which much of the risk remains with the Highways Agency. Problems arose on this contract due largely to a lack of suitable clay material to construct a replacement dam. An extension to the contract period was granted to summer 2000. Suitable materials have now been identified and the contract is on course for completion in summer 2000.

Contract 3: Medlock to Middleton was awarded as a 26 month design and build contract in April 1998, using the Agency's new procurement strategy. This contract has been selected as one of the demonstration projects under the Egan "Rethinking Contract" initiative. This is one of the 50 projects selected to demonstrate the commitment of government and industry to improve the industry's performance by identifying and delivering best practice. It remains on schedule for completion in summer 2000.

Housing Needs Indices

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the review of the needs indices used in the allocation of housing capital resources to local authorities and registered social landlords. [90503]

Ms Armstrong: A consultation paper is to be published today seeking views on a number of proposals for revisions to the needs indices to be used in the allocation of resources for 2000–01. The Paper will also seek views on a number of issues on the longer term development of the indices. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

Urban Renewal

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what part English Partnerships will play in the implementation of the report by the Urban Task Force "Towards an Urban Renaissance". [90280]

Mr. Caborn: The Government are currently considering the recommendations of the Urban Task Force report "Towards an Urban Renaissance". As part of this, English Partnerships will fully contribute its thinking.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what budget each regional development agency has for the year 1999–2000; [90284]

(2) what were the set-up costs of the regional development agencies; and how much are the projected running costs for the current financial year; [90285]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, South (Mr. Pearson) by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), on 17 May 1999, Official Report, columns 246–48, which gave details of resource allocations to regional development agencies (RDAs) for this financial year. In the last financial year, when they were set up, RDAs received grant in aid of £5.138 million.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much in grants has been allocated by each regional development agency since its inception. [90286]

Mr. Caborn: Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) took on their executive functions on 1 April 1999. Between then and 30 June RDAs have paid the following amounts in grant:

RDA	£ million
One North East	0.762
North West	1.310
Yorkshire Forward	2.558
East Midlands	1.434
Advantage West Midlands	0.981
East of England	0.311
South East	2.117
South West	3.020

English Partnerships

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much public money will be received by English Partnerships in 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [90281]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 448.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much money English Partnerships has granted to British industry in the latest year for which figures are available; [90282]

(2) how much money English Partnerships plans to provide in grant to British industry over the next financial year. [90283]

Mr. Caborn: The principal means of support for British industry is through English Partnerships Partnership Investment Programme (PIP). Grant in aid for PIP amounted to £200.7 million in 1998–99 and there is planned expenditure of £185 million in 1999–2000.

Rail Vehicle Accessibility

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the fleet of new trains to be introduced into service by Central Trains Ltd. and Anglia Railways Train Services Ltd. complies with the provisions of the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations 1998; and if he will make a statement. [90800]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As I explained in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 167, we are expecting to receive a number of exemption applications from train operating companies whose designs for new rail vehicles were well advanced prior to the 1998 Regulations coming into force.

We have received applications from both Central Trains Ltd. for their Class 170/5 rail vehicles and Anglia Railways Train Services Ltd. for their Class 170/2 rail vehicles. The exemptions have been assessed by our statutory advisers, the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee. They are mostly of a minor nature and have been requested for a relatively short time only.

The exemptions will not prevent disabled people from using the new trains. Indeed we believe that their introduction will make a significant contribution to improving mobility opportunities for disabled people. Exemption Orders have been laid in Parliament today.

Shellfish Waters Directive

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce new designations under the European Commission's Shellfish Waters Directive. [90923]

Mr. Meacher: A list of 93 areas in England to be designated under the Shellfish Waters Directive has been placed in the House. New designations will be made in 76 locations and the existing 17 designations will be included within revised boundaries for those areas.

These new designations take account of views expressed in a wide ranging public consultation exercise. I believe that they will more than meet the expectations of the shellfish industry. This extensive package of new designations will improve our environmental credentials in Europe. It represents very good news for the shellfish industry, the quality of whose harvests will be improved. But, more importantly from a water quality viewpoint, it should be good news for environmentalists, who should see yet further improvements in water quality around our coasts and in estuaries. Pollution control measures for designated waters will help improve nearby bathing waters.

I believe that all shellfish waters currently in need of protection are now covered by the pollution prevention measures which apply following designation. But I will keep the situation under review so that other shellfish areas can be protected where necessary.

For public health reasons, we need to minimise the levels of bacteria in shellfish. The Government's aim is that bacteriological standards should be achieved in designated waters which allow harvesting areas to achieve at least category B standard under the system applied by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to classify shellfish harvesting areas for food safety purposes.

We expect the total cost of improvements to continuous and intermittent discharges affecting shellfish waters in England to be around £81 million between 2000 and 2005. Much of this expenditure is necessary to achieve other water quality and environmental objectives, including those for bathing waters. The current Periodic Review of water company price limits will include allowance for the necessary investment by water companies.

Tree Preservation Orders

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to bring forward new regulations on tree preservation orders; and if he will make a statement. [90924]

Mr. Meacher: The Town and Country Planning (Trees) Regulations have been laid in both Houses today, and are due to come into force on 2 August. The Regulations will replace all existing secondary legislation in England and Wales on the subject of tree preservation orders.

A consultation paper setting out our proposals for these Regulations was issued in July last year. A summary of responses to the consultation paper, 204 in all, has been placed in the House Library.

A large majority of respondents broadly supported our proposals, so we have modelled the new Regulations closely on the provisions in the consultation paper.

We have made some revisions, however, in response to detailed points made in consultation. Local authorities were concerned that our proposals on compensation would lead to an unwelcome increase in petty claims for minor loss or damage caused by protected trees, so we have taken steps to rule out such claims by setting a lower limit of £500. In response to a general call for tree preservation orders to be circulated more widely, local authorities will be required to copy each new order to the people whose property adjoins the land on which the protected trees stand. In response to concerns that our proposal to exempt the pruning of fruit trees was open-ended, we have included new provisions making clear that such pruning must be carried out in accordance with good horticultural practice. Our proposals for speeding up appeals to the Secretary of State, which are made against a local authority's refusal of consent to do work on protected trees and handled without an inquiry or hearing, have also been revised to bring them into line with forthcoming reforms of planning appeals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kashmir

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will provide assistance to innocent people who have had lives and property damaged on either side of the Kashmir line of control by Indian forces. [89890]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

As we state in the Conflict Reduction and Humanitarian Assistance Policy Statement, we will provide humanitarian assistance to people affected by armed conflict, wherever this may be (a copy of the Statement is in the Library of the House). We will consider proposals to relieve the humanitarian needs of people on either side of the Line of Control in accordance with our policy statement.

Kosovo

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on the currency in Kosovo; and when a final decision on the currency to be used in Kosovo will be taken. [90127]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Such decisions are for the United Nations Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK).

Libya

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions have taken place between Ministers and officials in his Department and those in the Department of Trade and Industry, concerning delegations of hon. Members intending to visit Libya; [90097]

(2) what advice has been provided by his Department to hon. Members intending to join delegations visiting Libya. [90098]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 7 July 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in the House on 7 July 1999, Official Report, columns 1033–34.

Commonwealth Head of Government Meetings

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the procedure for drawing up the agenda for the Commonwealth Heads of Government meetings; and when the agenda for the next meeting will be (a) determined and (b) published. [90109]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The agenda for a Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) is initially drawn up by the host Government in consultation with the Commonwealth Secretariat. This provisional agenda is then circulated to all Heads of Government for comment. We understand that a provisional agenda for the forthcoming CHOGM, in November in South Africa, will be circulated in September. However, the South African Government have already proposed that the agenda be centred around the special theme of "People-Centred Development: The Challenge of Globalisation".

"Reinventing the Commonwealth"

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the Foreign Policy Centre's recent report on Reinventing the Commonwealth. [90112]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We share the view of the Foreign Policy Centre and other organisations that the role of the Commonwealth in the 21st century needs careful re-examination, particularly in order to ensure that its values, objectives and principles are more widely understood and shared. We consider the Centre's report a useful contribution to the debate.

UN Commission on Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the substantive resolutions and decisions made at the 55th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights meeting in Geneva on 22 March to 30 April. [89900]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Eighty two resolutions and 13 decisions were adopted at the 55th session. A full list is available in the Library of the House and on the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights' internet website.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the members of the United Kingdom delegation to the 55th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. [89901]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The 55th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights was attended by the late Derek Fatchett, who made a national statement in plenary on behalf of the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom delegation was headed by Audrey Glover CMG. She was supported by a team of officials from the United Kingdom Permanent Missions in Geneva and New York, and received additional support from London.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the issues of substance concerning the death penalty discussed under Item 17 at the 55th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights; what position was argued by the United Kingdom; what issues were put to the vote; what were the voting figures; and which way the United Kingdom voted on each occasion. [89902]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK co-sponsored an EU resolution calling on all States to abolish the death penalty and, where it is retained, to observe minimum international safeguards. The resolution, the text of which is available on the website of the office of the UN Commission on Human Rights, was adopted by 30 votes in favour, with 11 against and 12 abstentions. A paragraph vote tabled with the aim of weakening the text was defeated.

The UK also co-financed with Germany a panel discussion on the death penalty, with expert participants from the Council of Europe, International Commission of Jurists, Russia, Egypt, Pakistan, UK, USA and Trinidad and Tobago.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues were raised by the United Kingdom on the concept and practice of affirmative action under Item 16 at the 55th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights; what resolutions were moved by the United Kingdom; and what was the result. [89903]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom sponsored a decision entitled "The concept and practice of affirmative action", under agenda item 16 at the 55th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. The decision endorses the appointment of a Special Rapporteur to undertake a study on the subject of affirmative action. It was adopted by consensus by the Commission. There were no resolutions on this topic under this agenda item.

Human Rights Project Fund

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects, with the amounts of grant being paid in each case, being supported by the Human Rights Project Fund in (a) Armenia, (b) Azerbaijan, (c) Georgia, (d) Kazakhstan, (e) Kyrgyzstan, (f) Tajikistan, (g) Turkmenistan and (h) Uzbekistan. [89898]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Human Rights Project Fund supported six projects in Georgia, Kazakhstan and Turkmenistan in 1998–99. Details are set out in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox), 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 110. In the present financial year no projects in any of the countries referred to in the question have, as yet, been funded by the Human Rights Project Fund.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Safety

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when regulations will be made to give effect to the Government's decision to take the necessary steps to meet the concerns expressed by the European Commission about the United Kingdom's implementation of the general fire safety provisions of the European Council framework directive, as set out in his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) of 8 April 1998, Official Report, column 255; and if he will make a statement. [90697]

Mr. George Howarth: I have laid before Parliament Regulations to amend the Fire Precautions (Workplace) Regulations 1997 to the necessary extent to address the Commission's concerns about meeting the terms of the directive in full. The Regulations, as amended, apply throughout Great Britain. A regulatory impact assessment is attached to the Regulations showing that the estimated costs to employers attributable to these Regulations is expected to be between £2.3 million and £28.2 million. I am satisfied that the balance between cost and benefit is the right one in the circumstances. Copies of the Regulations and the regulatory impact assessment are in the Library.

There are two main changes to the 1997 Regulations. First, the deletion of most of the exceptions from the application provisions of these Regulations (among them, one for fire certificated premises) to meet the Commission's concerns. Second, in the light of the views expressed in response to the public consultation exercise we conducted, we have also taken this opportunity, for reasons of consistency, to provide the Regulations with a criminal sanctions only regime that is in line with existing fire safety and health and safety legislation. The Regulations, in their amended form, come into force on 1 December 1999. This, we hope, will give everyone sufficient time to prepare for their introduction.

We expect to publish fresh guidance for employers on 22 July to help them to meet their fire safety responsibilities in the workplace. To complete the picture, new guidance on the enforcement provisions and other requirements of the amended Regulations will be issued to fire authorities this autumn, after consultation of interested parties.

Domestic Violence

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward proposals for a new legal definition of domestic violence. [90110]

Mr. Boateng: There is currently no legal definition of domestic violence, since domestic violence is not a specific offence. The Government have no plans to change this situation.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary recently introduced a new definition for use by police forces in their returns of incidents reported. This is purely for the purposes of national statistics, to ensure that data obtained are more precise, consistent and comparable. It is not designed to change operational practice or to prevent police forces or other agencies from using other definitions if they consider that helpful locally.

Rape

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the definition of belief on the part of defendants in rape cases. [90241]

Mr. Boateng: This will form part of the consideration of the law by the Sex Offences Review.

Security Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 1999, Official Report, column 568, on the Security Service, if he will list the law enforcement agencies which could potentially task the Security Service with respect to serious crime. [89655]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service Act 1996 does not define the meaning of "law enforcement agencies" for the purpose of the Act.

However, I would regard a law enforcement agency for these purposes (and having regard to the serious crime provision in section 1(4) of the 1989 Act) as being a public body or government department whose functions include investigation of serious crime.

In practice, the Security Service will generally be acting in support of the following law enforcement agencies:

National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS)

National Crime Squad

Police forces

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

However, as the then Government made clear in the debate on the Security Service Act 1996, other agencies, including the Serious Fraud Office, the Immigration Service and the Inland Revenue, could also receive support from the Security Service.

All requests for Security Service assistance to law enforcement agencies in support of the prevention or detection of serious crime are co-ordinated through the NCIS in accordance with arrangements formally agreed between the Director General of NCIS and the Security Service.

Departmental Modernisation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the (a) consultancies, (b) companies and (c) project managers involved in the computerisation and modernisation of (i) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and (ii) the Passport Agency; [89924]

(2) if he will list the companies that are or have been responsible for (a) consultancy and project management and (b) the supply of computer hardware and software in relation to the information technology programmes which are currently being planned and implemented in (i) the Passport Agency, (ii) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and (iii) the Immigration Service; and, in each case, what penalties are included in their contracts for failure to deliver to cost, on time and to standard; [89886]

(3) if he will list the information technology programmes that have been planned and those which are currently being implemented to update (a) the Passport Agency, (b) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and (c) the Immigration Service, indicating in each case (i) their purpose, (ii) what stages of implementation have been planned and (iii) when it is expected to be fully implemented; [89885]

(4) if he will list (a) the payments received and (b) those currently being negotiated in respect of the failure of companies to fulfil their contracts in respect of the computerisation of the (i) Immigration and Nationality Directorate and (ii) the Passport Agency since 1990; [89887]

(5) if he will make a statement regarding the compatibility of the software and data handling systems currently being implemented in (a) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and (b) the Passport Agency; [89884]

(6) if he will place in the Library copies of all documents relating to the computerisation of (a) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, (b) the Document Reception Centre, (c) the Public Inquiry Office, (d) the casework programme and (e) the Passport Agency, listing those pages which have been withheld, giving the reason in each case. [89883]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In view of the detail sought, I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts awarded in relation to computerisation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, indicating in each case to whom it was awarded and on what date. [89881]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The following contracts are currently used for major computer developments in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate.

Young Offenders

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders received a caution plus in 1998–99 in each police authority area in England. [89922]

Mr. Boateng: Information on caution plus schemes is not collected centrally.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time accused young offenders spend between being charged by the police and first appearing in court in each police authority area in England. [90051]

Mr. Boateng: The exact information requested is not available. Information on the duration of criminal cases is available from the magistrates courts Time Intervals Survey which is carried out by the Lord Chancellor's Department. The latest available results refer to 1998 when the survey collected information on cases completed in magistrates courts in one week of each of February, June and October. The date of first appearance in court is not collected by the survey but the date of first listing—which is the same as first appearance when the defendant appears at first listing—is collected. The 1998 surveys do not specifically distinguish between adult and youth defendants, but do differentiate whether a case was completed in a Youth Court or an Adult Court, and the answer is supplied on that basis.

The table shows the average time from charge to first listing for defendants in indictable cases in the Youth Court by police authority area in England, and for England as a whole, in 1998.

[2] Defendants for whom the offence to charge time was over 10 years, or where the time from charge to first listing or first listing to completion was over 1 year, are excluded from the analysis.

[3] Small sample sizes mean that figures are subject to greater sampling error. Results based on a sample size of less than 100 should be interpreted with particular caution.

Refugees (Balkans)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees from (a) Bosnia and (b) Kosovo have arrived in the United Kingdom in each of the past five years. [90049]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. This relates to people who have applied for asylum and is a separate measure from those who arrived in the United Kingdom under the recent humanitarian and medical evacuation programme. Under those programmes, 4,380 Kosovars have arrived in the United Kingdom. A number of these may subsequently apply for asylum and thus be included in the tables. In addition, 2,736 arrived under earlier programmes announced from 1992 and 1995. I regret that, prior to 1996, statistics for the former Yugoslavia were not recorded under the individual states. It is also not possible separately to identify Kosovars within the available statistics for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 19 March, 22 April and 27 May with regard to Mr. Kochi Ahmed, husband of Mrs. S. Khan, from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton. [89959]

Mr. Straw: I replied to my right hon. Friend's letters on 6 July.

Rohypnol

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of crimes involving Rohypnol in the last year; and what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to raise public awareness on this issue. [89941]

Mr. George Howarth: We understand that in 1998, the Forensic Science Service screened 139 samples in rape cases for flunitrazepam (Rohypnol) with no positive results. Up until 20 May this year, 45 samples had been screened in rape cases also with no positive results.

The Home Office has recently given a police research award to two Metropolitan police officers for a research project which aims to establish the extent of drug assisted sexual offences in the United Kingdom. They are expected to report in April 2000. We will await the results of the study before making a decision on whether and how to further raise public awareness on the issue or take any further action.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has received on the compatibility of the prosecution for bearing false documents of asylum seekers in transit with Article 31 of the 1951 UN Convention relating to the status of refugees. [89717]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The details of the advice I receive from my officials are confidential, but I am advised that prosecution in these circumstances is not necessarily incompatible with the United Kingdom's obligations under Article 31. However, a decision about whether or not to prosecute in a particular case is entirely a matter for the Crown Prosecution Service.

Palace of Westminster (Demonstrations)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for (a) permitting and (b) policing demonstrations in the neighbourhood of the Palace of Westminster; who is responsible for issuing such permission; and on what authority. [89830]

Kate Hoey: Police permission is not required for people to assemble and protest peacefully. Marches or processions must be notified to the police. Under the Public Order Act 1986, the police have powers to impose conditions if it is necessary to prevent serious public disorder, serious damage to property, or serious disruption to the life of the community or intimidation. The Commissioners of Police, in both the City and Metropolitan police areas may, with the consent of the Secretary of State, make an order prohibiting the holding of processions for a specified period within their police areas.

In most cases, organisers contact the police who will advise on how the protest should be held without causing obstruction, breach of the peace or contravening any other legislation. Inevitably, there are cases where the numbers attending a demonstration will cause some obstruction and arrangements are made which endeavour to strike the correct balance between the rights of the protesters and those people going about their day to day business.

The policing of demonstrations in the neighbourhood of the Palace of Westminster is undertaken by the Charing Cross Division of the Metropolitan police with due regard to various legislation including the Public Order Act 1986, the Highways Act 1835, Common Law and the Sessional Orders.

Under Section 52 of the Metropolitan Police Act 1839 and Sessional Orders, the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police instructs all constables of the Metropolitan police to facilitate free passage to and from the Palace of Westminster on any day when Parliament is sitting. In carrying out this duty, no march will be authorised where there is any possibility of interference with Members travelling to or from the Houses of Parliament.

Race Relations Forum

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings the Race Relations Forum has held since its formation; what priorities and targets the Forum has adopted; what representations the Forum has made to which departments of Government; what changes have been made to the membership of the Forum; what procedures are in place for the appointment of new members of the Forum; and what measures the Forum has taken to secure representations from the Irish community. [89904]

Mr. Straw: The Forum has met four times: on 23 June, 14 October 1998, 9 March and 28–29 June 1999. The Forum has discussed race issues in the Home Office and its services with me and the Permanent Secretary; in the armed forces with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence; and with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in his areas of responsibility. It also had a presentation from two of the Advisers to the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry and discussed how the Report's recommendations might be implemented. At its last meeting, it considered the development of a race equality strategy across government.

There have been three changes in membership. Pauline Schofield, Project Co-ordinator of the Birmingham Irish Community Forum, has replaced Gobnait Ni Chrualaoi, who resigned as the representative of the Irish community. Sukhvinder Kaur Stubbs, Chief Executive of the Runnymede Trust and a Member of the Department for Education and Employment Advisory Group on Raising Awareness of Ethnic Minority Pupils, and Gloria Mills, Director of Equal Opportunities at UNISON, have joined the Forum. Appointments are made on the basis of recommendations from a selection panel comprising the Head of the Race Equality Unit, my Race Relations Adviser and an independent, academic member.

Family Court Welfare Officers

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in reviewing the future arrangements for the Family Court Welfare Officer Service; what plans he has to amalgamate their Service with that of the guardians ad litem; when such changes will be made; and if he will make a statement. [90077]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

Ministers and officials have been considering the key issues arising from last year's inter-departmental consultation paper on the future organisation of court welfare services. Discussions are proceeding and a decision is expected shortly.

TREASURY

Single-earner Couples

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reintroduce the option of joint tax assessment for married couples, with particular reference to single-earner couples. [89895]

Dawn Primarolo: None. The Government believe that the measures announced in the Chancellor's Budgets—such as the 10p starting rate of tax, National Insurance Contributions reform, the introduction of the children's tax credit—provide a better deal for people in work and for families.

Income Tax

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will initiate inquiries into the delays involved in issuing the CIS5 and CIS6 certificates to industrial and commercial firms; and if he will take steps to ensure that the relevant certificate will be issued to Messrs EK Mechanical Services of 97 West Road, Westcliff on Sea, Essex, by the Inland Revenue before 1 August. [90184]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue is taking all possible steps to issue CIS5 and CIS6 certificates as rapidly as possible to all applicants who qualify for them. The majority of those applicants have already been issued with the relevant certificate. The balance will be issued as soon as possible, bearing in mind that the new scheme begins on 1 August.

It would not be proper to disclose publicly whether an individual taxpayer has received or will receive a certificate, since that would involve disclosure of his or her personal tax affairs. I will write to the hon. Member specifically on his constituent.

Departmental Joint Working

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to improve joint working between his departments. [90735]

Dawn Primarolo: A number of Government departments—not only ones reporting to the Chancellor of the Exchequer—will be working on a pilot project to test different ways in which Government departments can work together more closely. The focus for this pilot will be the fashion industry in London. The aim of the pilot is to improve services to business through joint working (eg combined visits and trader education) to help traders understand what they need to do to meet legislative requirements. The pilot will also be looking to identify ways of raising compliance and reducing fraud and creating a level playing field for business so that legitimate business can thrive.

Road Fuels (Northern Ireland)

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the loss of revenue from cross-border shopping and smuggling of road fuels, petrol and diesel from the Republic of Ireland into Northern Ireland. [90736]

Ms Hewitt: Customs and Excise has provisionally assessed the combined loss from cross-border shopping and smuggling to be of the order of £100 million per annum.

International Financial Crises

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the United Kingdom's position as regards the responsibility of the private sector in the response to international financial crises. [87881]

Ms Hewitt: We are working with our G7 partners to shape expectations so that private-sector creditors know that they will be expected to bear the consequences of the risks they take. There are several ways in which this can be achieved. First, there needs to be a greater use of market-based tools to involve the private sector in forestalling and managing crises, for example through a broader use of collective action clauses in sovereign debt contracts. Second, efforts should be made to ensure there is better communication and co-operation between emerging market countries and their creditors. Third, the G7 countries have agreed that a broad framework for involving the private sector in crisis resolution should be drawn up, which sets out in advance principles, considerations and a broad range of tools.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the reassessment of the objectives of IMF policy in responding to financial crises. [87880]

Ms Hewitt: At last week's summit in Cologne, G7 leaders announced a six-point plan for strengthening the international financial system. This included measures to increase the effectiveness of the IMF and the other international financial institutions; proposals to promote transparency and best practice, with the IMF monitoring compliance with new codes and standards; a new framework for involving the private sector in crisis prevention and management; steps to strengthen financial regulation in industrialized countries, and macroeconomic policies and financial systems in emerging markets where the IMF will work with the World Bank in providing advice and assistance; and promoting social policies to protect the poor and most vulnerable to ensure that they are better protected from the burden of adjustment at times of crisis.

Taken together these recommendations represent a significant strengthening of the international financial system which will help reduce the risk of financial crises and make it easier for the international financial community, especially the IMF, to manage future crises effectively. We are working closely with the IMF to see that these initiatives and reforms are implemented successfully.

Climate Change Levy

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the effect on the balance of payments of the impact which the climate change levy will have on the chemical and steel industries in the 10 years after its introduction; [88104]

(2) what action he proposes to take to ensure that manufacturing industry remains competitive after the introduction of the climate change levy; and if he will make a statement; [88106]

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect the introduction of the climate change levy will have on inward investment in each sector of industry; and if he will make a statement; [88113]

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect of the climate change levy on energy-intensive industry on (a) direct and (b) indirect employment in that industry over the next five years; and if he will make a statement; [88010]

(5) what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of the climate change levy on global carbon dioxide emissions caused by industry relocating to countries with less stringent environmental legislation; and if he will make a statement; [88064]

(6) what assessment he has made of the scope for other European Union countries to introduce the climate change levy at rates which are low but consistent with them achieving their Kyoto commitment; and if he will make a statement; [88114]

(7) on what basis the calculation of the revenue generated from the introduction of climate change levy was made; and if he will make a statement; [88199]

(8) if he will publish his targets in terms of income from national insurance contributions and allowances for energy efficiency agreements on an industry by industry basis; and if he will make a statement; [88225]

(9) what estimate he has made of the net financial impact on the Government following the introduction of the climate change levy, in terms of the reduction of national insurance contributions for (a) central Government employees and (b) local government and public services employees; and if he will make a statement; [88322]

(10) what assessment he has made of the advantages of basing the climate change levy on the amount of carbon dioxide released; and if he will make a statement; [88387]

(11) if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of applying the climate change levy to domestic consumers; and if he will make a statement. [88323]

Ms Hewitt: The climate change levy is estimated to save around 1.5 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2010, thereby making a very significant contribution to meeting the Government's legally-binding target for reducing greenhouse gas emissions set under the Kyoto Protocol, and its domestic goal of a 20 per cent. cut in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010.

The climate change levy will entail no increase in the overall burden of tax on business as the revenue will be fully recycled via a 0.5 percentage point cut in employer National Insurance Contributions. Business will also benefit from an additional £50m for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, like solar and wind power.

Following Lord Marshall's recommendations, and the Government's Statement of Intent on Environmental Taxation, the Government recognise the need for special consideration to be given to energy intensive industries given their energy usage and exposure to international competition. Consequently, significantly lower rates of tax will be set for those energy intensive sectors that agree targets for improving their energy efficiency. A number of sectors including the aluminium, iron and steel, and chemicals sectors are currently involved in those negotiations. The net impact of the climate change levy and the associated reduction in National Insurance contributions on individual sectors will depend on the rates at which the levy is set. The final rates of the levy will not be set until Finance Bill 2000.

The Government are keen to work with business on the detailed design and administration issues relating to the levy. HM Customs and Excise have just completed a further round of consultation on these issues and the Government are assessing these responses alongside other representations in deciding how to design the levy to maximise the environmental benefits whilst safeguarding competitiveness.

As the Government's climate change consultation document makes clear, all sectors of the economy will need to play their part in tackling the problem of climate change. It is not the Government's intention to introduce new taxes on domestic fuel and power, for social policy reasons. However, there are a number of measures in place to encourage energy efficiency in households, including the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme. These measures are set out in the climate change consultation document and will form part of the climate change strategy to be published later this year.

The UK is not alone in having to meet targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, or in using economic instruments to do so. Since 1990, seven EU countries have introduced explicit taxes on the carbon or energy content of fuels, including most recently, the 'Eco-Tax' introduced by the German government. On current projections, most OECD countries will have to introduce new measures of one form or another to meet their Kyoto obligations.

— Gold

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make extra provision for debt relief in the highly indebted poor countries whose export revenues and central bank reserves have been affected by falls in the gold price. [88824]

Ms Hewitt: Decisions on the level of reduction in Heavily Indebted Poor Countries' debt burdens needed to achieve debt sustainability take account of economic variables, including the level of exports.

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings of the JCC he has attended. [89279]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by the Prime Minister on 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 362.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list from the JUVOS database for each region of the United Kingdom the proportion of all those who left the claimant count for jobs who left after (a) less than six months claiming jobseeker's allowance, (b) six to 12 months claiming jobseeker's allowance, (c) 12 to 24 months claiming jobseeker's allowance and (d) more than 24 months claiming jobseeker's allowance during (i) April 1997 to April 1998 and (ii) April 1998 to April 1999. [89370]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

ISAs

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what research he has commissioned to gauge the take-up of ISAs among new investors; [R] [89321]

(2) how many investors have so far taken out mini or maxi ISA schemes who previously did not have (a) PEPs or (b) TESSAs. [R] [89702]

Ms Hewitt [holding answers 1 and 5 July 1999]: Information on the extent to which ISA investors hold PEPs or TESSAs will be identifiable from the annual returns provided to the Inland Revenue by PEP and ISA managers and TESSA operators after the end of each year.

We keep all aspects of tax policy under review, and commission research where necessary to supplement available data. For example, HM Treasury has commissioned ongoing research on the ISA market from McKinsey & Company, Inc., which will collect data from providers on take-up of ISAs by component, broken down between those accounts meeting the CAT standards and those not.

Euro (EC Seminars)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his answer of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 423–24, on the Euro (EC Seminars), at which vulnerable sectors of the population The Prince Programme was targeted. [89826]

Ms Hewitt: The Prince Programme covers an information campaign called the "Euro". This includes a series of projects, with the objective of facilitating the changeover to the euro among vulnerable sectors of the population. Vulnerable sectors covered are those in economic and social difficulty, the elderly, visually impaired, hard of hearing and those with learning difficulties.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997, stating in each case whether the results were published. [89697]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 5 July 1999]: I regret that this information is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Divorce Statistics

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his most recent estimate of the number of marriages which ended in divorce in the last year for which figures are available. [90327]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 8 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number of marriages estimated to end in divorce.

The table below gives the numbers of marriages which took place in England and Wales in a selection of past years, and the numbers and percentages of those marriages which had ended in divorce by 1994. Also given are the percentages of those marriages estimated to have ended in divorce by the tenth wedding anniversary.

Numbers and percentages of marriages which ended in divorce, by year of marriage, England and Wales

[2] Estimates

In addition, an estimate has been made of the percentage of marriages which would end in divorce were the divorce rates by duration of marriage to remain unchanged at their 1993–94 levels. On this basis, 41 per cent. of marriages would ultimately end in divorce.

CABINET OFFICE

Ireland/UK Co-operation

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made in co-operation between Ireland and the United Kingdom in developing east-west relations since publication of the progress report issued on the margins of the European Council Meeting in Luxembourg on 12 December 1997; on what dates the Joint Steering Group co-chaired by the Department of the Taoiseach and the Cabinet Office has met in 1998 and in 1999 to date; if he will list those documents agreed by the Joint Steering Group; and if he will place a copy of each in the Library. [89899]

Mr. Kilfoyle: There has been close and effective co-operation between the two Governments since the Luxembourg Council, and officials and Ministers of both Governments have continued to take forward the programme of work outlined in the Joint Report of 12 December 1997, with frequent ministerial visits in both directions. There was further evidence of the closeness of the relationship when the Prime Minister accepted an invitation from the Taoiseach to address the Irish Parliament on 26 November last year. Co-operation has also been manifested in the efforts of the two Governments to facilitate the Good Friday Agreement of 10 April 1998 and its subsequent implementation. It has not been necessary for officials of the Department of Taoiseach and the Cabinet Office to meet specifically in order to co-ordinate this work. The Government look forward to strengthening that co-operation further when the British–Irish Council and the British Irish Intergovernmental Conference, established under the agreement come into operation.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to reduce hospital waiting lists; and if he will make a statement. [89854]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Since April 1997, the Government have invested £58 million to help NHS Wales reduce waiting lists and cope with increased pressures from emergency medical admissions during the winter months. An additional £19 million per year has been made available recurrently from 1999–2000.

Between March 1997 and March 1999 in-patient and day case waiting list figures fell from 67,609 to 65,315, following a peak of 76,016 in August 1998.

Since then, in-patient and day case waiting list figures have increased and stood at 67,732 at the end of May 1999.

Bringing waiting lists down remains a priority for the Government.

Following the transfer of functions on 1 July 1999, waiting lists are now a matter for the National Assembly for Wales to address.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the (a) cost of and (b) numbers affected by amending the law to ensure entitlement to Incapacity Benefit is reliant on a requisite record of past National Insurance contributions in (i) one of the last three complete tax years, (ii) one of the last four complete tax years, (iii) one of the last five complete tax years, (iv) one of the last six complete tax years and (v) one of the last seven complete tax years. [89714]

Mr. Bayley: Under current legislation entitlement to Incapacity Benefit depends on a minimum number of National Insurance contributions having been paid in only one tax year. The table shows the benefit savings and numbers affected in the first, third and tenth years of requiring the same amount of contributions to have been paid in one of the last three, four, five, six and seven years. Only about 30 per cent. of those affected would have a cash loss. In 70 per cent. of cases Income Support would fully compensate for loss of entitlement to Incapacity Benefit.

	Savings Year 1 £ million	Number affected Year 1	Savings Year 3 £ million	Number affected Year 3	Savings Year 10 £ million	Number affected Year 10
Tax years over which contributions must be paid
1 in 3	20	25,000	55	55,000	115	110,000
1 in 4	15	15,000	35	40,000	80	80,000
1 in 5	10	15,000	30	30,000	60	60,000
1 in 6	10	10,000	20	20,000	45	45,000
1 in 7	5	5,000	15	15,000	35	35,000

Notes:
1. Figures may not sum due to rounding.
2. All figures are in April 1998 benefit rates. Savings figures quoted are net benefit expenditure savings.

State Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the net saving to public expenditure of raising the state pension age to (a) 66 and (b) 67 years from 2039. [90188]

Mr. Timms: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioner benefit units claiming Income Support, where the head of household is over 80 years, receive (a) at least one full basic state pension and (b) some payment of basic state pension. [90189]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

The proportion of claimants aged over 80 in receipt of Income Support and retirement pension

Pensioners	Number
Total Income Support claimants over 80	593,000
Percentage receiving a full basic State pension	87.7
Percentage receiving an element of the basic State pension	8.8
Percentage not in receipt of any basic State pension	3.6

Notes:
1. The table shows information relating to the type of pension received by the claimant only, rather than the benefit unit. Of the claimants aged over 80, 31,000 have partners of pension age, of whom 30,000 are receiving some State pension. Information on the type of pension in payment to a partner cannot be included in the table, as the sampling methods used to obtain this information relate to individual pensioners, not benefit units.
2. Estimates of the number of Income Support claimants aged over 80 years, and the number of partners, are rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Estimates of Income Support and State Pension caseloads are based on a 5 per cent. sample size, and are therefore subject to a degree of error.

Primary Benefit Recipients

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the most recent available date the number of primary benefit recipients who are (a) married men with dependent children, (b) married women with dependent children, (c) single men with dependent children, (d) single women with dependent children, (e) single men under pension age, (f) single women under pension age, (g) married male pensioners, (h) married female pensioners, (i) single male pensioners and (j) single female pensioners, broken down for each benefit. Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has of the extent of income sharing within couples in receipt of means-tested benefits. [90322]

Angela Eagle: We have commissioned a qualitative research study into the financial arrangements of couples on benefit, which should give us a better picture of the arrangements that couples make to manage their benefit income. The results of this study should be available later this year.

The research study builds on a number of previous studies which have explored how resources are allocated within households. We have undertaken a comprehensive review of these studies which will be published in the Autumn.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce benefit splitting for means-tested benefits. [90321]

Angela Eagle: Current rules provide for benefit paid in respect of a family to be paid to the main claimant. However, there are provisions to allow the payment of all or part of the benefit to be paid to a third party, including the claimant's partner, where this is in the interests of the family; for example in cases where the claimant has difficulties in budgeting or suffers from alcohol or drug abuse. We have included provisions in the current Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill to allow these splitting arrangements to apply to hardship payments of Jobseeker's Allowance, but we have no plans for any further extensions to these arrangements at present.

HEALTH

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to implement the joint recommendations of its Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Adviser on population health surveillance in respect of genetically modified and other novel foods. [89055]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 29 June 1999]: A sub-group of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes and other experts is already considering this issue. It has already held two open meetings and is planning to hold another shortly. It will publish proposals in due course.

Mr. Denham: The information available is given in the table.

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89989]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning within the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party Members of Parliament. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the incidence of smoking is among teenagers (a) overall and (b) in each region. [89569]

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the impact of smoking on the ageing of the skin. [89571]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 7 July 1999]: Although the Department has not sponsored specific research on this topic, recent published papers have concluded that smoking causes skin wrinkling that could make smokers appear prematurely old.

Mental Health

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to amend the definition of nearest relative, in section 26 of the Mental Health Act 1983; [90187]

(2) if he will bring forward amendments to the Mental Health Act 1983 to provide, for those people treated under section 131, (a) the right to a second opinion, (b) access to hospital managers' hearings and (c) access to mental health review tribunals; and if he will make a statement. [90185]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a 'root and branch' review of the Mental Health Act 1983 in July 1998. An expert committee was appointed to advise on the changes necessary, and they will shortly be making their recommendations to Ministers. The committee undertook a full consultation on a wide range of issues. Once the Government have received the expert committee's report, we will draw up final proposals for a new legislative framework and these will be subject to full formal consultation. New mental health legislation will be introduced as soon as it is appropriate to do so.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently being treated in psychiatric hospitals under section 131 of the Mental Health Act 1983. [90186]

Mr. Hutton: Section 131 of the Mental Health Act 1983 concerns informal admissions of patients. It is not a formal detention section. Information on informal admission of psychiatric patients is not available centrally.

SCOTLAND

Refugees

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with the Scottish administration and Scottish local authorities about the implications of the Immigration and Asylum Bill for refugees in Scotland. [88592]

Dr. Reid: There have been regular consultations between my office, the Scottish Executive and local authorities about the implications of the Bill.

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of the JCC he has attended. [89272]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 362.

Holyrood House

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many days in each year since 1992 the Palace of Holyrood House was occupied by (a) the Sovereign and (b) other members of the Royal Family. [89551]

Dr. Reid: Since 1992, the Palace of Holyrood House was occupied by (a) the Sovereign and (b) other members of the Royal family as follows:

Year	Sovereign	Other members of the Royal Family
1992	6	17
1993	6	26
1994	11	17
1995	7	22
1996	6	20
1997	10	24
1998	5	17
1999	[1]3	[1]7

[1] Interim figure to 1 July 1999

In addition, the Lord High Commissioner, acting as the Sovereign's representative at the General Assembly, occupies the Palace generally for a week in May each year.

From 1 July 1999, provision of the official residence of the Sovereign in Scotland became a matter for Scottish Ministers.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the running costs of the Secretary of State's Office for 1999–2000. [89857]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 412–13, about amending running costs provision for 1999–2000. The current provision was based on estimates made in January 1999. I have since been reviewing the role and functions of my Department after 1 July and I will make a further statement in due course.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Records Advisory Council

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Lord Chancellor will open meetings of the Advisory Council on Public Records to the public; and how many representations the Lord Chancellor has received on this matter since May 1997. [90058]

Mr. Vaz: The Government's policy document "Quangos: opening the doors" stated that NDPBs, of which the Advisory Council on Public Records is one, should hold open meetings where practicable and appropriate. The Council is keen to conduct its business in as public a manner as possible. However, one of its main responsibilities is in respect of the 30-year rule. This involves the discussion of information which is invariably confidential and frequently has significant security and foreign relations implications. Notwithstanding this, the Council is prepared to consider any request for public access to its deliberations which would not interfere with the proper discharge of its functions.

In accordance with this approach, the Council made arrangements for a particular part of its business to be televised last year. It would be prepared to make arrangements of a similar nature in future. The Council is anxious that the activities which it undertakes on behalf of the public are as widely publicised as possible.

The Lord Chancellor has previously received no representations on this matter.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the response of the Chairman of the Advisory Council on Public Records to June 1997 petition from the census historians seeking the right to inspect 50-year-old decennial censuses of population for England and Wales; and if he will list the hon. Members who have made representations to the Lord Chancellor on this matter. [90059]

Mr. Vaz: A copy of the petition was sent to the chairman of the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Council on Public Records by a Mr. Denis McCready on 14 June 1997. Mr. McCready had been in lengthy correspondence with the Lord Chancellor, his Department, the Council and the Public Record Office, and the Lord Chancellor had instructed his private secretary to write to him to say that further letters would receive no reply. The secretary of the Council replied to Mr. McCready's letter on 17 June to say that the chairman had decided not to put the matter to the Council since the closure of the census had already received very full consideration over the years and that the Lord Chancellor's instructions about further correspondence applied to the Council. The Lord Chancellor has received no representations from hon. Members on this matter.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lindane

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the use of lindane for seed treatment; and if he will make a statement. [90837]

Mr. Rooker: We have now banned the use of lindane to treat seeds in England, Scotland and Wales. We have considered carefully the representations received as a result of our announcement of 18 June 1999, Official Report, columns 233–34, that we planned to implement in full the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. We understand that the decision will cause real difficulties to some companies and farmers but we have not received any further evidence to suggest that the risk to operators from treating seed with lindane was significantly less than that assessed by the Committee. I have therefore acted, with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, Scottish Ministers and the Welsh Assembly to revoke the approvals for the use of lindane to treat seed as of July. Similar steps are being taken in Northern Ireland.

The Committee has advised that the risk to farmers from using lindane-treated seed is acceptably low. Farmers may also adopt other strategies to combat pests including other cereal seed treatments or crop sprays.

Consumers may be reassured that other approved uses of lindane, which continue for the present, do not constitute an unacceptable risk to consumers.

Cattle Disease

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department has provided to farmers on ways they can reduce the risk of diseases spreading to their cattle. [90838]

Mr. Rooker: We have published two leaflets on this issue today. The first, "Farm Biosecurity: Protecting Herd Health" covers general disease prevention and the second "TB in Cattle: Reducing the Risk" is aimed more specifically at reducing the threat of tuberculosis.

This is an important area; through these leaflets we are aiming to raise farmers' awareness of the importance of good practice in reducing disease risk and the benefits it offers. These leaflets offer good advice that farmers throughout the country should follow.

The leaflets will be given to cattle farmers by State Veterinary Service staff and Local Veterinary Inspectors during farm visits and are being made widely available through markets, the Farmers' Unions and local Agricultural Department offices.

I have arranged for copies of both leaflets to be placed in the Library of the House.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for consultation on the proposed level of fees for cattle passports. [90839]

Mr. Rooker: The Cattle Tracing System (CTS) was launched by the Government in September 1998. The system is run by a new organisation, the British Cattle Movement Service (BCMS). The new system enables a full record to be kept of cattle and where they have been throughout their lives, helping the livestock industry to provide assurance to its customers.

Since its launch and until 5 July 1999, 2,330,113 passports for cattle have been issued by BCMS, at an average rate of 11,650 per day. It is expected that between $2\frac{1}{2}$ and 3 million cattle passports will be issued annually. At the current time, 90 per cent. of passports are issued within 3 working days of an application being received. In addition, since last September, 1,446,993 movements of cattle have been recorded on the new system: and 221,506 calls from farmers have been handled by the BCMS call centre since it opened in July 1998.

The Government announced in February 1998 that they would pay for setting up the Cattle Tracing System (CTS) and for running it during its first full year of operation. This represented a benefit of some £36 million to the livestock industry. The Government believe that as the main beneficiaries, the livestock industry should now take over the costs of running the CTS from 27 September 1999. In a consultation document issued today, interested organisations are being consulted on the level of charges, what they cover and the methods of payment.

We propose that the fee should be £7 per cattle passport. This is in the lower half of the £5 to £10 range indicated in November 1997.

This proposed fee does not include the cost of time spent checking the eartags and passports of animals handled by the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS). Instead it is proposed that the MHS should recover these costs directly from abattoirs. The cost to the abattoir sector is likely to be around £2 million per annum.

The Government propose not to charge for temporary passports, known also as calf passports. Calves are less valuable than older animals. The passport fee will be payable however if a temporary passport is submitted for conversion to a full cattle passport.

A copy of the consultation package, including a draft Regulatory Impact Assessment, are being placed in the Library of the House. Comments are sought by 9 August. There will be separate consultations by the administrations in Scotland and Wales, but it is expected that the fee will be at the same rate in all three countries of Great Britain.

Biotechnology

Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the consumer/environmental/pressure groups with which his Department's Ministers or officials have held meetings since June 1998, indicating in how many of these meetings genetically modified organisms or biotechnology were discussed. [90922]

Mr. Rooker: MAFF Ministers and/or officials have had more than 360 meetings with the consumer/environmental/pressure groups listed since June 1998. Genetically Modified Organisms/biotechnology were discussed during approximately 40 of these meetings.

Wild Boar

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of boar living in the wild in the United Kingdom. [89954]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

There are estimated to be around 100 wild boar living free on the borders of Kent and East Sussex, with between 12–20 in Dorset.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 17 June 1999, Official Report, columns 216–18, what is his Department's current appraisal of tonnage of discarding for gadoids, by type. [88607]

Mr. Morley: ICES estimated for 1997 that in the North Sea (ICES reporting areas IIa and IV) some 52,000 tonnes of haddock and 17,000 tonnes of whiting were discarded. Estimates made by CEFAS on a similar basis for cod indicate discards of between 31–35,000 tonnes. The majority of these would be undersized.

PRIME MINISTER

Kosovo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the Deputy Prime Minister's oral answer of 30 June 1999, Official Report, column 339, what British police contribution has been provided for policing activities in Kosovo. [89931]

The Prime Minister: Prior to the commencement of hostilities, two officers from the Metropolitan police were working in Kosovo as observers. When the situation became unstable, they were immediately withdrawn to Macedonia.

When NATO's military action ended, the Chief Prosecutor with the International War Crimes Tribunal made a request for assistance with the recovery of forensic evidence relating to alleged war crimes in Kosovo. The Metropolitan police were approached and agreed to send a team of officers who have specialist skills and knowledge. The team complement in Kosovo is 16, comprising forensic scientists, police officers and pathologists.

In addition, the United Nations have requested 60 UK police officers for Kosovo. We have offered to provide these officers to recruit, to train and to monitor a civil police force for Kosovo. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office are currently discussing with the United Nations and the OSCE what specific roles these officers might undertake.

Ministerial Code

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to amend the Ministerial Code as recommended by the Committee on Standards and Privileges in its Eighth report of Session 1998–99 (HC 807). [89869]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The Government welcome the report of the Committee on Standards and Privileges on the premature disclosure of reports of the Foreign Affairs Committee. It offers guidance where none previously existed. I will review the wording of the Ministerial Code in the light of the Report. The Government will, of course, respond to the Committee's recommendations shortly.

Cabinet Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Prime Minister if he will include the Secretaries of State for International Development and for Education and Employment on the Cabinet committee relating to defence and overseas policy. [90240]

The Prime Minister: Ministers who are not members of the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy (DOP) are invited to attend its meetings as necessary, as is the case for any Cabinet Committee.

Junior Doctors

Dr. Harris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his Oral answer to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) of 7 July 1999, Official Report, column 1026, how many junior doctors were working beyond the 56 hour limit as at 31 March; what proportion of junior doctors this represents; and what percentage change this represents from the number so working in September 1998. [90801]

The Prime Minister: We are committed to improving hours and working conditions of junior doctors, and are doing so. The number of junior doctors working more than 56 hours was 4,793, or fewer than one in six in September 1998, having fallen every six months since March 1997 when it stood at 6,485.

The numbers are likely to have fallen further since then, given the continuing action to improve working hours. The regional task force chairmen—who are responsible for providing support and advice to the NHS on reducing junior doctors hours—have confirmed that, keeping to a consistent definition of hours worked, they would have expected the numbers of junior doctors working more than 56 hours to have fallen further since September 1998, continuing the trend after March 1997.

However, in December 1998, with the support and agreement of the Junior Doctors Committee, we introduced new and tougher compliance criteria in order to safeguard the quality of rest periods for junior doctors. Although they would not in fact represent a change in actual hours worked, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear on 19 May 1999, Official Report, column 1139, that any figures on this new basis could well be higher. As expected, around 8,500 posts were found not to be complying with this different and tougher measure, which for the first time included, for example, the number of rest hours while on call and at weekends, as well as actual hours worked. We are committed to reducing this number further.

There is therefore no statistical basis for making the comparison requested between September 1998 and March 1999. Our best estimate is that the numbers working over 56 hours are likely to have continued to fall over that period.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Voluntary Work

14. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans to encourage and support voluntary work in the community. [88980]

Ms Hodge: The Department encourages a wide range of voluntary activity in education and training. We have also established Millennium Volunteers to enable young people aged 16–24 to give their time for the benefit of others and support of the Prime Minister's vision of an Active Community.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

15. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to inform employers and small businesses of their obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [88981]

Ms Hodge: On 9 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched our "See the Person" campaign which, among other things, aims to improve business awareness of obligations to disabled people under the DDA. The DDA Helpline continues to provide help. A range of leaflets and advice has been produced, targeted at suppliers of goods and services and employers. On 29 June we published a new Code of Practice on the DDA responsibilities of service providers. This will be backed by national newspaper advertisements in July, and further newspaper and radio advertisements in the Autumn, as well as articles, speeches and seminars targeted at business.

School Repairs

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the progress made in eliminating the backlog of essential repairs and improvements to school buildings in England. [88982]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We certainly inherited a large backlog of repairs and improvements when we took office. We have already allocated £680 million under the New Deal for Schools and will be supporting capital works amounting to a further £5 billion over the rest of this Parliament. This represents a doubling of investment compared to the previous Government and will substantially reduce the backlog. LEAs are responsible for their own maintenance programmes. By developing Asset Management Plans, which we are supporting and encouraging they will be able to make a more accurate assessment of capital spending needs and priorities, in consultation with their schools and their local partners.

Young People (Assistance)

17. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support is given by his Department to initiatives for helping young people who are not in education, training or employment. [88983]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in announcing the Government's White Paper, "Learning to Succeed", outlined a new strategy called 'Connexions' for making sure that far more young people continue in education and training until they are at least 19.

Alongside the forthcoming Social Exclusion Unit Report on 16–18 year olds not in education, training or work, and building on the White Paper, we expect to announce more about the strategy and the new support service for young people shortly.

Age Discrimination

18. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department is taking to tackle age discrimination in the workplace. [88984]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are making good progress. Within the last month we have launched the Code of Practice for Age Diversity in Employment; announced the Pathfinder Areas for the New Deal 50plus and initiated consultation on the basic design guidelines for New Deal 50plus. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Severe Learning Disability

19. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of those with severe learning disability. [88985]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Our policies for children with special educational needs, including those with severe learning difficulties, are set out in "Meeting Special Educational Needs: a programme of action", published on 5 November 1998.

School Funding (LEAs)

20. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the funds passed on to schools by local education authorities in 1999–2000. [88986]

Ms Estelle Morris: I would refer my hon. Friend to the tables which we recently published which show that in 1999–2000 14 authorities passed on less than 90 per cent. of the increase in the education Standard Spending Assessment and a further 20 are passing on less than the full 100 per cent. of the increase. The remaining authorities passed at least 100 per cent. of the increase and in some cases more.

30. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the tables of English local education authorities schools' budgets. [88996]

Ms Estelle Morris: The feedback that we have received so far from local education authorities on the tables of comparative data has on the whole been positive.

34. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those local authorities not spending the full amount of their central Government funding allocated for schools. [89000]

Ms Estelle Morris: We published tables of local education authority expenditure for the first time on 24 June. They indicated that 34 authorities had increased their education budgets this year by less than 100 per cent. of the increase of their Standard Spending Assessment: full details are in the tables, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries. The figures were constructed from a comparison between the Local Schools' Budget in 1999–2000 and the General Schools budget in 1998–99, with adjustments and making allowance for authorities' expenditure on non-school items.

35. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about the funding of schools in Northumberland; and if he will make a statement. [89001]

Ms Estelle Morris: Since the start of the financial year the Department has received five letters about school funding in Northumberland.

Class Sizes

21. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in reducing class sizes for five, six and seven-year-olds; and if he will make a statement. [88987]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are on course to meet our pledge to limit infant class sizes for five, six and seven-year-olds to 30 or below by September 2001. There were almost 130,000 fewer infants in classes over 30 in January this year than in January 1998. We expect the number of infant pupils in classes over 30 to fall below 200,000 by September, a reduction of almost 60 per cent. on the January 1998 figure of 485,000.

Literacy (Primary Schools)

22. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provisions there are in the National Curriculum to ensure the teaching of literacy in primary schools. [88988]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Our proposals for the revised National Curriculum are fully aligned with the objectives in the National Literacy Strategy "Framework for Teaching", which primary schools have been teaching in the daily Literacy Hour since September 1998.

New Deal 50plus

23. Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which areas have been chosen for new deal 50plus pathfinder projects. [88989]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There will be nine pathfinder areas, one in each of the seven Employment Service regions in England, and one each in Scotland and Wales. Those areas are: Black Country; City Pride Manchester; Dorset; Durham; Edinburgh East and Midlothian; Hull; North Derbyshire; North East Wales; and Oxfordshire.

Early Learning

24. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what responses there have been to the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority's consultation on establishing a foundation stage for three to five-year-olds. [88990]

Ms Hodge: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority's recently published summary of responses to the review of the Desirable Learning Outcomes shows overwhelming support for the establishment of a foundation stage for three to five-year-olds.

	Percentage
Questions asked by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority	Sample response
Are the aims of the foundation stage broadly right?	98
Do the Early Learning Goals reflect the aims?	Average 95
Are the Early Learning goals appropriate for the majority of children at the end of the foundation stage?	Average 91
Should a foundation stage be established?	89

27. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to raise the quality of early years pre-school education. [88993]

Ms Hodge: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) is reviewing the Desirable Learning Outcomes and has proposed the introduction of a Foundation Stage until the end of Reception Year. The QCA is also establishing a Qualifications and Training Framework for the early years education, child care and playwork sector. The Government are currently considering their response to the consultation on regulation and inspection of early years education and care and hope to make an announcement shortly.

32. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the review of pre-school education will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [88998]

Ms Hodge: I have asked the panel reviewing the future role of pre-schools and playgroups to report to me by the middle of August. The review is considering how pre-schools and playgroups can play a full part in the expansion of early education and child care services.

Excluded Pupils

25. Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils were excluded from school last year; and if he will make a statement. [88991]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In 1997–98 12,300 pupils were permanently excluded from maintained schools. This is good news because permanent exclusions have fallen by 3 per cent. (from 12,700 in 1996–97), the first decrease since the Department began collecting information in 1994–95.

Pupil Funding

26. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to increase the equality of funding between pupils in different parts of England. [88992]

Ms Estelle Morris: Over the next three years we will be reviewing the methodology for calculating Education Standard Spending Assessments to improve the fairness of the current formula and to try to find long-term solutions to the problems we inherited.

Lecturers' Pay

28. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional resources will be made available to increase pay levels for lecturers in further and higher education institutions. [88994]

Mr. Mudie: We have made available an extra £776 million for higher education this financial year and next and an extra £725 million for further education over the same period. It is for the employers in their respective sectors to determine how much of these increases to devote to pay.

Nursery Places (Sheffield)

29. Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the provision of nursery places in Sheffield. [88995]

Ms Hodge: Sheffield's Early Years Development and Childcare Plan for 1999–2000 sets out how a free early education place is being made available for every four-year-old child whose parents want it. My Department gave full approval to Sheffield's Plan in March. Sheffield was one of 57 authorities allocated funding for creating new nursery places for three-year-olds in 1999/2000. We are still considering each Local Education Authority's plan for increasing early education places for three-year-olds.

New Deal Gateway

31. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to improve the functioning of the New Deal Gateway. [88997]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As part of the continuous improvement of New Deal we are currently in the final stages of planning for trailblazer products which will develop and test a number of different approaches in making achievement more intensive for young people in the Gateway. These are due to be launched later this summer. Additional measures are also being introduced across the country this month to make the fourth month of Gateway more effective in managing the transition of individuals between the Gateway and jobs or New Deal options.

The New Deal carries with it obligations for young people to make use of the support offered. That is why we recently announced our intention to strengthen the sanctions against young people who fail to co-operate in moving from Gateway to suitable options.

New Deal (Young People)

33. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the environmental task force option within the new deal for young people. [88999]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of April 1999 show that 14,200 young people had started on the New Deal Environment

Task Force. This Option offers young people a range of practical skills, work experience and an opportunity to study towards a recognised qualification normally up to S/NVQ level 2 or equivalent. I am increasingly impressed by the progress of this option and the range of projects it has available.

New Deal (Employers)

36. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers have signed up to the New Deal to date. [89002]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Almost 52,000 employers have signed New Deal agreements so far.

School Transport

37. Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce the results of the review of school transport. [89003]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The School Travel Advisory Group, formed to look at all aspects of school travel and transport, will be making recommendations to Ministers in the autumn.

A-level Results

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average A-level results for each subject, for each local education authority area, broken down by (i) schools and (ii) sixth form colleges in 1998. [88584]

Mr. Mudie: A table giving details of the average GCE A-level results for the twelve most popular subjects, for each local education authority area, broken down by (i) schools and (ii) sixth form colleges in 1998 will be placed in the Library.

Research Grants

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the criteria used to determine what sums are awarded to each individual higher education establishment in the form of research grants. [88831]

Mr. Mudie: The Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) has set out its criteria for allocating research funds in a guide "Funding higher education in England: How the HEFCE allocates its funds", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

The Research Councils award competitive grants to researchers in higher education using peer review to assess proposals. The current criteria employed by each of the Research Councils have been placed in the Library.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the subject and date of each written briefing prepared by his Special Advisers for all Labour Members since May 1997 and the total number and total cost to date of these. [89980]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 6 July 1999]: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Schedule 1, Part 1 of the Model Contract sets out the role and duties of Special Advisers. As well as research for Ministers and reviewing papers, contributing to policy planning with the Department and preparing policy papers, speechwriting and liaison with outside interest groups, their role explicitly includes liaising with the Party and helping to brief Party MPs. Records are not held of when such briefings are given. Similar arrangements have applied under successive Governments.

School Performance Tables

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that school performance tables reflect the achievements of children of all abilities. [89342]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The achievements of all pupils in GCSEs, GNVQs, other vocational qualifications and National Curriculum assessments are included in school performance tables, regardless of their abilities. We continue to look for ways of reporting the achievements of pupils who are unable to meet the minimum standards of the GCSE and equivalent qualifications by the end of their compulsory schooling, in consultation with the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. We introduced a point score in the secondary tables in 1998 to reflect achievements across the full ability range more closely.

Cabinet Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many meetings of the JCC he has attended. [89276]

Mr. Mudie: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 362.

Individual Learning Accounts

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of providing each further education student with an individual learning account credited with an amount equivalent to the cost of undergraduate tuition fees. [89359]

Mr. Mudie: The national framework for individual learning accounts is being developed. Currently we are targeting people aged 18 years and over who are in employment or about to return to work. At this stage, we are not planning to offer individual learning accounts to full-time further education students. We are planning to pilot different approaches to some aspects of further education funding through individual learning accounts during 1999 and 2000.

Safe Play Surfaces

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the guidance issued since 1992 to local education authorities regarding the provision of, and funds for, safe play surfaces for (a) nursery schools and units, (b) infant and junior schools and (c) secondary schools. [89964]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department's guidance for schools on play surfaces is contained within its 1997 Building Bulletin 85, "School Grounds: A Guide to Good Practice". Before then, the Department referred inquirers to the National Playing Field Association's publication, "Play Safety Guidelines", and continues to do so. The Department has not issued guidance to local education authorities on funding for safe play surfaces.

Commonwealth (National Curriculum)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will include study of the Commonwealth in the planned citizenship module of the national curriculum. [90111]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The proposed framework for citizenship sets out programmes of study to help pupils become informed, active and responsible citizens, which at Key Stages 3 and 4 covers knowledge and understanding of the challenges of global interdependence and responsibility. This offers an opportunity for study of the Commonwealth.

Primary School Inspections

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what representations he has received about lay inspectors heading inspections of primary schools; [90289]

(2) what training is received by lay inspectors heading inspections of primary schools; [90290]

(3) what proportion of inspections of primary schools is headed by lay inspectors. [90291]

Ms Estelle Morris: The registration and training of inspectors who conduct school inspections contracted-out by Ofsted is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools. He announced in 1996 that an opportunity would be provided for experienced lay inspectors with appropriate skills to become Registered Inspectors and therefore be eligible to lead school inspection teams. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Transmitter Masts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guidance he has given to those schools which have transmitting masts on their premises concerning the impact of these masts upon the health of pupils, professional staff, ancillary staff and the general public; and if he will make a statement; [90365]

(2) how many schools, primary and secondary, have approached him concerning the health and safety consequences of transmitting masts on schools premises regarding pupils, staff and the general public; and if he will make a statement; [90366]

(3) what research he has commissioned into the potential health hazards of transmitting masts on school premises; and if he will make a statement. [90367]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The National Radiological Protection Board—which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health sponsors—is responsible for advising the Government on radiological protection matters. The Department has not separately issued advice to schools or commissioned research on the impact of these masts.

Since July 1997, the Department has received two letters from schools, 25 letters from members of the public and six letters from hon. Members about the possible health effects of radio transmitters on school premises. Of these 33 letters, 31 were received during the past two weeks. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations at his constituency office in Sheffield.

We take very seriously the recent public concern about the siting of these masts on school premises and the possible health risks to children. Discussions are taking place urgently with the other Departments involved to see what further research and guidance or other action may be necessary.

Schools (Disabled Access)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support has been given to schools to enable them to become accessible to those with disabilities. [88972]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Each year we have increased substantially the resources available for the Schools Access Initiative, to invest in making mainstream schools more accessible to those with disabilities and sensory impairments. For the three years from April 1999 we will be allocating a total of £100 million of new money. The £20 million we have allocated this year will improve access for pupils in over 1,600 schools.

Disability Rights Commission

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects the Disability Rights Commission to be fully operational. [89711]

Ms Hodge: Subject to Parliament enacting the Disability Rights Commission Bill, which had its Report and Third Reading in this House on 30 June 1999, Official Report, columns 365–400, we expect the Commission to begin operations in April 2000. Initial planning for the establishment of the Commission has begun. However, much of the work cannot commence until after Royal Assent of the Bill and when the Chairman, Chief Executive and Commissioners have been appointed. It will be for them to decide the range of services available from its operational date.

Teachers (Age Profiles)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many state school teachers there are aged between (a) 21 and 25, (b) 25 and 30, (c) 30 and 35, (d) 35 and 40, (e) 40 and 45, (f) 45 and 50, (g) 50 and 55, (h) 55 and 60 and (i) 60 and 65 years. [90088]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is contained in Table 26 of the publication "Statistics of Education: Teachers: England and Wales: 1998 Edition". A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 334

SESSION 1998–99

28th June—8th July 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
